Contents

Preface to the second edition page ix

Acknowledgements x

1 The images of places 1

Where would you really like to live? 1
The nature of different places 4
Relative accessibility and population potential 6
Perception of the environment 11
The geographer and spatial perception 24

2 Images of Britain 31

The Bristol viewpoint 32
The Sevenoaks viewpoint 34
The Aberystwyth viewpoint 34
The Liverpool viewpoint 37
The Redcar viewpoint 37
The Inverness viewpoint 40
The national surface and the local domes of preference 42

3 Environmental preferences and regional images in the USA and Canada 53

The California viewpoint 54
The Minnesota viewpoint 57
The Pennsylvania viewpoint 57
The Alabama viewpoint 59
The North Dakota viewpoint 61
Perception space around Texas and Georgia 63
Environmental images from Illinois 66
Ontario and Quebec 73

4 Patterns of ignorance, information and learning 82

The ignorance surfaces of North Dakota, Illinois and Pennsylvania 83

The confusion matrix 87
The travel field 90
The information surface 90
Information in Ontario and Quebec, Canada 94
Information in Sweden 96
Man in information space 107
Barriers to information flows 108
Learning and the strength of preference signals 114
The growth of spatial preferences in Western Nigeria 115

5 Mental maps and administration 121

Allocating people to places 121
Government service in Tanzania 124
Government service in Ghana 126
Chinese and Malayan views of Malaya 129
Smoothing mental maps 132

6 Mental maps in today's world 134

Implications of mental maps 135
Mental maps and locational decisions 138
Mental maps of the military 140
Changing mental maps 144
The perception of Europe 146
The geographer and education 151
Barriers to information flows 152

Appendix: the construction of mental maps 157
Ranking space preferences 157
The construction of a mental map 160

Bibliography 165
Index 169