

BIBLIOGRAPHY

This bibliography is divided into three sections. In Section A are listed all of the editions of Galen referred to in the text, as well as others of importance. Section B collects all important translations of works of Galen into English, as well as a selection of those rendered into other modern languages (in particular in cases where no English version exists). Finally, section C lists all of the secondary material referred to in the text, plus a representative sample of other important works of secondary literature which are not. The items listed are predominantly in English; but since much important work on Galen has been done in other languages, items in French, German, Italian and Spanish have also been included. Several works appear in more than one section, a few in all three (when they contain text, translation, as well as critical material). It is to be hoped that this reduplication will assist readers in navigating the bibliography. They should also consult the two appendices, which relate English and Latin names and abbreviations of the treatises with their location in Kühn and other editions, and with translations into modern languages where applicable.
