

Contents

List of Maps	xi
List of Tables	xiii
Acknowledgments	xv
Note on the Text	xvii
Introduction	3
Part I. The Western Theatre: The Struggle for Northwestern Eurasia
1 Laying the Foundations, 1650–1775	17
The Geopolitical Setting	17
Hesitant Integration	33
Trade, Religion, and Law	52
2 Full Integration, 1775–1815	69
Territorial and Administrative Integration	69
Religion and Economy	85
The Baltic Provinces	105
3 Unitary State or Empire? 1815–1855	124
Civil Administration and the Army	124
Society, Law, and Trade	143
On the Road to Disintegration	162
Conclusion to Part I: The Western Theatre	175

Part II. The Southern Theatre Reaches the Sea

- 4 Laying the Foundations, 1650–1725 187
 The Geopolitical Setting 187
 The Cossacks 205
 Society, Religion, and Trade 222
- 5 Toward Full Integration, 1725–1796 240
 Civil and Military Administration 240
 Ecclesiastical and Legal Integration 258
 The Ethnographic Map 277
- 6 Unitary State or Empire? 1796–1855 296
 Regional Integration 296
 Fiscal and Commercial Integration 314
 The First Cracks 333
- Conclusion to Part II: The Southern Theatre 346

Part III. The Eastern Theatre: The Advance toward the Mountains

- Introduction to Part III: The Eastern Theatre 359
- 7 Laying the Foundations, 1650–1730 371
 The Geopolitical Setting 371
 The Expanding Russian Core 388
 Agents of Integration 406
- 8 The Progress of Integration, 1731–1782 426
 The Military Structure 426
 Land, Peoples, Religions 446
 Fiscal and Commercial Integration 466
- 9 Unitary State or Empire? 1782–1830 486
 The Administrative Infrastructure 486
 Judicial Integration 507
 Economic Integration 525
- Conclusion to Part III: The Eastern Theatre 546
- Conclusion 555