

Contents

Introduction	1
1. The Emotions	18
1.1 Fear and anger in De Anima A.1	18
1.2 The first moves	20
1.3 Physics and mathematics	24
1.4 The range of Aristotle's proposal in De Anima A.1	30
1.5 The proper way to study anger: the role of matter	32
1.6 The model of De Anima A.1	35
1.7 Gaps and queries	40
2. Enmattered Form: Aristotle's Hylomorphism	42
2.1 Introduction	42
2.2 Two Interpretations	45
2.3 Snubness and S-structures	47
2.4 Metaphysical basis (1): Metaphysics Z.10 and 11	53
2.5 Metaphysical basis (2): Metaphysics H.2–4	65
2.6 Forms and causation	68
2.7 Is the matter of natural substances inseparable in definition from their forms?	79
2.8 Interim conclusions: a problem	85
2.9 Three ways of going (slightly) wrong	87
2.10 Summary: surviving questions	92
3. Desire and Action	94
3.1 An unnerving silence	94
3.2 How to fill the silence?	95
3.3 The harmony theory: problems for the non-reductionist interpretation	97
3.4 Desire in De Motu : Aristotle's four-stage account	102
3.5 Desire, confidence, and the connate pneuma : their role in action	105
3.6 Instruments, joints, etc.	110
3.7 Desire and action: an overview of Aristotle's account	114
3.8 Conclusions	115
4. Taste and Smell: With Some Remarks on Touch	118
4.1 Introduction	118
4.2 Some reminders	119
4.3 Perceiving: ontology refined	120
4.4 Perceiving: a 'mere Cambridge change'?	130

4.5	Perceiving: the issue	133
4.6	Tasting: an inextricably psycho-physical completion	136
4.7	Tasting: problems for the spiritualist interpretation	138
4.8	Tasting: problems for the non-reductionist materialist interpretation	144
4.9	Tasting and smelling: a summary	152
4.10	The case of touch	153
4.11	Taking on the form without the matter	155
4.12	Interim conclusions	162
5.	Hearing, Seeing, and Hylomorphism	163
5.1	Hearing: the issue	163
5.2	Hearing: what is the sound in the medium?	165
5.3	Sounds, sounding, and hearing: the message	168
5.4	Hearing: interim conclusions	171
5.5	A spiritualist argument concerning seeing	172
5.6	What happens in the medium?	174
5.7	The medium (1)	179
5.8	The medium (2): the 'illuminable', fire, and the colours in the 'illuminable' (diaphanes)	182
5.9	The sense organ: seeing	185
5.10	Seeing: a more general perspective	188
6.	Perception, Desire, and Action: Inextricably Embodied Subjects	194
6.1	Introduction: further extensions?	194
6.2	The perception of moving objects: 'common sensibles'	195
6.3	Perception, pain, pleasure, and desire: the basic model	205
6.4	Imagination and desire: the basic model extended	210
6.5	The human subject: the unity of our soul	213
6.6	Practical thought: an essentially enmattered type of thought?	217
6.7	Thought and subjects of thought	220
6.8	Summary	223
7.	Aristotle's Viewpoint	225
7.1	Common to body and soul	225
7.2	A first comparison: non-reductionist materialism	229
7.3	Partial overview	232
7.4	Aristotle and functionalism	234
7.5	Ackrill's problem: different perspectives	239
7.6	Aristotle and neo-Aristotelian hylomorphism	246
7.7	No longer credible?	253
8.	Aristotle's Undivided Self	254
8.1	Two inextricability theses	254
8.2	The first inextricability thesis: the search for the purely psychological	259
8.3	The search for the purely psychological continued: subjectivity revisited	264

8.4 Further arguments against essential embodiment	269
8.5 The second inextricability thesis: the role of the purely physical	272
8.6 Isn't Aristotle's view a 'notational variant' of non-reductionist materialism?	276
8.7 Diagnosis, resolution, and remaining problems	281
Bibliography	287
Index Locorum	295
General Index	299
Index Nominum	302