

Table of Contents

Acknowledgements	7
Chapter 1. Beyond an affaire: managing ethnography	9
1.1. An article and its afterlife: reputation management in action	10
1.2. Engaging with the trouble: ethnography, academia, and society	12
1.3. Writing this book: set-up and chapters	15
Chapter 2. Doing ethnography: an approach, not a method	21
2.1. Ethnography as relational and processual	22
2.2. Ethnography beyond anthropology	25
2.3. Ethnography in a changing world	27
2.4. Conclusion: epistemological plurality	31
Chapter 3. Research ethics: problems with regulation	33
3.1. Ethical self-regulation in anthropology	34
3.2. Enforceable ethics: state governance and beyond	39
3.3. Conclusion: doing ethics differently	48
Chapter 4. The complexities of doing no harm and informed consent	51
4.1. Doing no harm: power and ethos	52
4.2. Informed consent: the forms	56
4.3. Informed consent: the principle	60
4.4. Ethnography, concealment, and publication	62
4.5. Conclusion: ethical dilemmas	68
Chapter 5. Open Science and replication: trust, distrust, and transparency	71
5.1. The Open Science movement: from utopia to dystopia?	72
5.2. The trouble with transparency	77
5.3. The replication crisis: what does it mean?	79
5.4. Ethnography, replication, and openness	85
5.5. Conclusion: another kind of openness	91

Chapter 6. Constructing integrity: codification in context	93
6.1. Public scandals and the emergence of integrity codes	93
6.2. Constructing integrity: comparing the codes	94
6.3. Policy-making: projectification and integrity	103
6.4. Conclusion: from ethics to commerce	106
Chapter 7. Anonymity, positionality, and field notes: integrity in practice	109
7.1. Contesting anonymity: a turn to disclosure?	110
7.2. Positionality and substance: relations in process	116
7.3. The problem with sharing field notes	122
7.4. Conclusion: a case-by-case approach	126
Chapter 8. Academic freedom: scholarship and politics	129
8.1. A diversity of perspectives: politicising the academy	130
8.2. Funding and employment	134
8.3. External threats and internal harassment	137
8.4. Israel/Palestine: academic freedom in action	139
8.5. Conclusion: acting with responsibility	144
Chapter 9. Conclusion: dilemmas and responsibilities	145
9.1. Ethics, integrity, and power	146
9.2. Doing ethics and integrity differently	147
9.3. Academic freedom: ethnography and beyond	150
Notes	151
References	171