

Contents

|                                                                                                                          |    |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----|
| Introduction . . . . .                                                                                            | 7  |
| The existing stratigraphical division of the Miocene . . . . .                                                    | 9  |
| Critical remarks concerning the individual stages of the Oligocene and Neogene . . . . .                          | 12 |
| The establishment of neostratotypes and the development of an open chronostratigraphical scale . . . . .          | 21 |
| Principles of the establishment of neostratotypes . . . . .                                                              | 21 |
| Problems of open chronostratigraphical scale . . . . .                                                                   | 23 |
| Foundations of the biostratigraphical division of the Miocene and Upper Oligocene . . . . .                       | 28 |
| Foraminifera . . . . .                                                                                                   | 29 |
| Molluscs . . . . .                                                                                                       | 37 |
| Fossil mammals . . . . .                                                                                                 | 39 |
| Outline of the stratigraphy of the Upper Oligocene and Miocene in Europe . . . . .                                | 41 |
| The North Sea Basin (Boreal bioprovince) . . . . .                                                                       | 41 |
| The Rhine Graben and Mainz Basin . . . . .                                                                               | 46 |
| The Aquitanian Basin (Celtic-Lusitanian bioprovince) . . . . .                                                           | 47 |
| Brittany (Celtic-Lusitanian bioprovince) . . . . .                                                                       | 49 |
| Iberian Peninsula – Portugal (Lusitanian bioprovince) . . . . .                                                          | 50 |
| Spain (Mediterranean bioprovince) . . . . .                                                                              | 50 |
| The Rhône Basin . . . . .                                                                                                | 52 |
| The Apennine Peninsula (Mediterranean bioprovince) . . . . .                                                             | 52 |
| Islands in the Mediterranean, Greece, Albania . . . . .                                                                  | 55 |
| The Paratethys . . . . .                                                                                                 | 56 |
| Western Paratethys . . . . .                                                                                             | 58 |
| Perialpine Foredeep . . . . .                                                                                            | 58 |
| Central Paratethys . . . . .                                                                                             | 59 |
| Carpathian Foredeep . . . . .                                                                                            | 59 |
| The Ždánice and Pouzdřany units in Moravia, the units of the Outer Flysch Belt in Poland, U.S.S.R. and Rumania . . . . . | 62 |
| The Vienna Basin . . . . .                                                                                               | 62 |
| The Intracarpethian Depression . . . . .                                                                                 | 63 |
| Conclusion . . . . .                                                                                                     | 65 |
| Eastern Paratethys (the Pontian-Caucasian-Caspian and Aralian regions) . . . . .                                         | 68 |
| Thracia, Bulgaria, Rumania, western and south-western Ukraine . . . . .                                                  | 68 |
| The Crimean, Peri-Caucasian, Peri-Caspian and Peri-Aralian regions . . . . .                                             | 68 |
| Correlation of beds of the European Upper Oligocene and Neogene . . . . .                                         | 73 |

Notes on the interrelationship of Upper Oligocene and Miocene sedimentary areas in Europe . . . . .

83

Correlation of the European Upper Oligocene and Miocene with the main world bioprovinces of the Tertiary . . . . .

86

|                                            |    |
|--------------------------------------------|----|
| Asia . . . . .                             | 86 |
| Australia, New Zealand . . . . .           | 89 |
| Africa . . . . .                           | 90 |
| North, Central and South America . . . . . | 92 |

Conclusion and remarks on the absolute age of rocks . . . . .

96

|                |    |
|----------------|----|
| Note . . . . . | 98 |
|----------------|----|

References . . . . .

99

|                               |     |
|-------------------------------|-----|
| References-Appendix . . . . . | 113 |
|-------------------------------|-----|

|                              |     |
|------------------------------|-----|
| Geographical index . . . . . | 116 |
|------------------------------|-----|

|                                 |     |
|---------------------------------|-----|
| Stratigraphical index . . . . . | 119 |
|---------------------------------|-----|

|                                  |     |
|----------------------------------|-----|
| Palaeontological index . . . . . | 123 |
|----------------------------------|-----|

Czech summary (Stratigrafické problémy miocénu Evropy) . . . . .

126