

CONTENTS

Lajos Nyírő, The Russian Formalist School 7

Historical survey 9 — The Russian Formalists' views on literary theory 28 — Summary 65

László Sziklay, The Prague School 69

Its birth and place in Czech cultural history 71 — The connection of literary studies and contemporary poetry 73 — The Praguians and the Russian Formalists 74 — The functions of language 75 — The German precedents 78 — The most important theses of the Prague School 81 — The linguistic and prosodic approach to the work of art 83 — Structure and semantic gesture 83 — The modernity of poetry 86 — The aesthetic function of the work of art 93 — The problem of literary periods, the immanent development of literature 95 — Periodization and the genesis of the literary work 95 — From structuralist poetics to structuralist aesthetics and philosophy of art 96 — Mukařovsky's one-sidedness 103 — National literatures and the comparative method 106

József Szili, The New Criticism 113

Poetry as cognition and as structure — the views of Ransom, Tate and Brooks 115 — Fugitivism, Agrarianism and New Criticism 118 — Ransom, Tate and Brooks on poetry as cognition 129 — Contextualist models of the work of art 139

György M. Vajda, Phenomenology and Literary Criticism . . 163

Introduction 165 — — Phenomenological concepts 166 — Variants of the phenomenological approach to literature 171 — The methodological principles of the phenomenological analysis of the literary work 198 — Epilogue in 1977 222

Károly Varga, The Sociological Approach to Literature 231

Definition 233 — The forerunners of the sociological approach to literature 238 — The problems of the sociological approach to literature 251 — The significance of the sociological approach to literature in the development of the theory of literature 294