

Contents

List of Illustrations	ix
Note on Archival Documentation	xi
Acknowledgments	xiii
List of Abbreviations	xv
 Introduction: Clear and Prescient Danger	 1
1 The Promise of Social Science Before 1945	18
2 A Struggle for Existence, 1946–50	42
3 The Failure of the Office of Reports and Estimates, 1947–50	77
4 The Intel Intellectual as Administrator and the Reforms of 1950–53	100
5 The Intel Intellectuals and the Emergence of a Strategic Intelligence Discipline	135
6 The National Intelligence Estimates of Soviet Strategic Intentions and Capabilities	165
7 Soviet Economic Capabilities and the Inventory of Ignorance	199
8 The Princeton Consultants	227
9 Kent’s “Theory of the Fuck Up of the Imponderables”	239
Conclusion: The Intel Intellectuals as Agents of Change	248
 Appendix: National Intelligence Estimate: Probable Soviet Courses of Action to Mid-1952	 257
Bibliography	267
Index	279
About the Author	288