

Contents

Acknowledgements	vii
Preface	ix
Introduction: Being a Television Intellectual: An 'Unusual Type of Star'	xiii
1. Civilisation to Civilisations : Benchmark Events	1
2. Jacob Bronowski's The Ascent of Man : A Feeling for Language	19
3. Jonathan Miller's Atheism : Irony and Unshakeable Disbelief	33
4. Marcus du Sautoy's The Story of Maths : Solving Problems as Triumph and Tragedy	48
5. Niall Ferguson's The Ascent of Money : Landscapes of Threat and Opportunity	65
6. Simon Schama's 'The Two Winstons' and 'The Second Moment of Creation': Then and Now	81
7. Mary Beard's Ultimate Rome : Legend as History, History as Myth	97
8. Alice Roberts' Digging for Britain and Pam Cox's Servants : Reaching for the Audience	114
9. David Olusoga's 'First Contact' and 'The Cult of Progress': Imperial Conquistadores or Trading Partners?	132

10. Janina Ramirez's and Alastair Sooke's 'Beirut': Barbarism, Tourism and Layered Identity	147
11. Brian Cox: Seven Days on Mars : Expert Identities	161
12. British Television Intellectuals: 'A Gateway to Something Else'	176
Coda: Tim Winton's Ningaloo : 'Resisting the False Shape of Closure'	195

References	211
------------	-----

Index	217
-------	-----