

CONTENTS

|                                                                                                                                            |           |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------|
| Preface                                                                                                                                    | 11        |
| List of Abbreviations                                                                                                                      | 13        |
| Understanding Populism Between Myth and Reality by Mattia Zulianello                                                                       | 15        |
| <hr/>                                                                                                                                      |           |
| Part I. Populism and Non-Populism                                                                                                   | 49 |
| 1. What populism... is not! (Davide Vittori)                                                                                               | 50        |
| 2. Not everyone can be a populist: the ideological boundaries of populism (Stijn van Kessel)                                               | 53        |
| 3. Looking beyond populism... to better understand populism (Bartek Pytlas)                                                                | 56        |
| 4. Populism: left or right? (Dani Filc)                                                                                                    | 59        |
| 5. Populist communication—style over substance? (Lone Sorensen)                                                                            | 62        |
| 6. The strategic use of populism (Michael Hameleers)                                                                                       | 65        |
| 7. Complementary opposites: technocracy and populism (Petra Guasti)                                                                        | 68        |
| 8. Populism and Euroscepticism: convergences and overlaps (Antonella Seddone)                                                              | 72        |
| 9. What is sovereignty? (Nicolò Conti)                                                                                                     | 75        |
| 10. Anti-populist communication (Vlastimil Havlík and Alena Kluknavská)                                                                    | 78        |
| 11. What have we learned? (Petra Guasti)                                                                                                   | 81        |
| <hr/>                                                                                                                                      |           |
| Part II. Ideology and Political Positions                                                                                           | 83 |
| 1. Brothers of Italy is not a post- or neo-fascist party, but it might pose an illiberal challenge (Leonardo Puleo and Gianluca Piccolino) | 84        |
| 2. Boom to bust: where next for Matteo Salvini's League? (Arianna Giovannini and Davide Vampa)                                             | 87        |
| 3. Are "common sense" and "good practices" right-wing or left-wing? The ideological roots of techno-populist rhetoric (Enrico Padoan)      | 90        |
| 4. The emotional core of left- and right-wing populism (Donatella Bonansinga)                                                              | 93        |
| 5. Why Italian political parties use populist rhetoric on social media (Andrea Ceron, Silvia Decadri and Fedra Negri)                      | 96        |
| 6. Femonationalism (Francesca Feo)                                                                                                         | 98        |
| 7. Populism and gender issues in Le Pen and Meloni (Marianna Griffini and Laura Montecchio)                                                | 101       |
| 8. Europe, an ideological resource for the populist radical right (Marta Lorimer)                                                          | 104       |
| 9. The position of Italian parties on the war in Ukraine (Mara Morini)                                                                     | 106       |

|                                                                                                                                            |     |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 10. The same thing? The foreign policy of the extreme right and the radical right ( Jakub Wondreys )                                | 109 |
| 11. Why Putin's no populist ( Luke March )                                                                                          | 113 |
| 12. Ukrainian modern populism: the case of Volodymyr Zelensky ( Kostiantyn Yanchenko )                                              | 116 |
| 13. The resurgence of agrarian populism ( Matthijs Rooduijn and Sarah De Lange )                                                    | 119 |
| 14. Peronism in Argentina exemplifies the chameleonic nature of populism ( Wolfgang Muno and Christian Pfeiffer )                   | 122 |
| 15. The rise of left-wing populism in Europe: ideological divergence and a nationalist turn ( Mattia Collini and Michel Perottino ) | 126 |
| 16. United in delegitimization? Czech and German branches of the sovereign citizens movement ( Aleš Michal )                        | 130 |
| 17. Evolution of radical right movements in Czechia ( Jan Charvát )                                                                 | 133 |
| 18. Many faces of one creature: populism in local manifestos of SPD ( Petr Voda )                                                   | 137 |
| 19. ANO's evolution ( Tomas Cirhan )                                                                                                | 141 |
| 20. The fusion of nationalism and communism in contemporary Slovak discourse ( Filip Žiljak )                                       | 144 |
| 21. What have we learned? ( Petra Guasti )                                                                                          | 147 |

Part III. Leadership and Organization 151

|                                                                                                                                                                  |     |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1. Myth: all populist leaders are "charismatic" ( Adrian Favero )                                                                                         | 152 |
| 2. Narendra Modi: India's "vulnerable" strongman populist leader ( Proma Raychaudhury )                                                                   | 155 |
| 3. Populism, (perception of) authenticity, and political communication ( Diego Ceccobelli )                                                               | 158 |
| 4. Populism and platform leadership ( Federica Nunziata )                                                                                                 | 161 |
| 5. Populism and celebrity politics ( Donatella Campus )                                                                                                   | 164 |
| 6. Populism: going beyond the myth of the charismatic leader ( Sabine Volk )                                                                              | 167 |
| 7. Legitimacy and visibility: the mainstreaming of the populist radical right at the local level ( Adrian Favero )                                        | 170 |
| 8. Beyond grievances: the path to populist radical-right party membership ( Sofia Ammassari )                                                             | 173 |
| 9. Left-wing populism and social movements: the French and Spanish cases ( Laura Chazel )                                                                 | 176 |
| 10. Populism in the digital environment. What can be learned from the experience of the Five Star Movement and the Rousseau platform ( Filippo Tronconi ) | 179 |
| 11. Techno-populism: from the people 2.0 to the digital plebs? ( Michal Malý )                                                                            | 182 |
| 12. Chatbot politicians: who are they, and what is their connection to populism? ( Silvija Vuković )                                                      | 185 |
| 13. What have we learned? ( Petra Guasti )                                                                                                                | 188 |

|                                                                                                                                       |                |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------|
| Part IV. Political Opportunity Structure                                                                                       | 189     |
| 1. Why is Italy more populist than any other country in Western Europe?( Michelangelo Vercesi )                            | 190     |
| 2. Populist zeitgeist à la Française ( Petra Guasti and Michel Perottino )                                                     | 193     |
| 3. Crises and populism: the case of Slovakia ( Petra Guasti, Michal Malýand Aleš Michal )                                 | 197     |
| 4. Why right-wing populist parties are more successful in some countriesthan in others ( Léonie De Jonge )                 | 201     |
| 5. Social media: populists' partners in crime ( Laura Jacobs )                                                                 | 204     |
| 6. The right's "female face": media framing of populist radical rightwomen leaders ( Alexandra Snipes and Jakub Wondreys ) | 207     |
| 7. Towards the consolidation of a new cleavage? The evolutionof the "demarcationist" bloc in Europe ( Vincenzo Emanuele )  | 210     |
| 8. Neo-Traditionalism in Central and Eastern Europe ( Francesco Melito )                                                       | 214     |
| 9. Populist instrumental use of religion: the cases of Bolivia and Turkey( Greta Lanza )                                   | 217     |
| 10. Nostalgia and populism ( Ezgi Elçi )                                                                                       | 220     |
| 11. Social democratic responses to populism: a comparative analysis( Petra Guasti, Aleš Michal and Michal Malý )           | 223     |
| 12. Deliberation is no silver bullet for the "problem" of populism ( Kristof Jacobs )                                          | 227     |
| 13. Populist attitudes as thermometers of democratic quality( Marie-Isabel Theuwis and Rosa Kindt )                        | 230     |
| 14. Responding to populism with caution ( Anthoula Malkopoulou )                                                               | 233     |
| 15. What have we learned? ( Petra Guasti )                                                                                     | 236     |
| Part V. Populist Voters and Their Context                                                                                  | 239 |
| 1. Don't exaggerate the importance of populism ( Yaoyao Dai )                                                                  | 240     |
| 2. Who is a populist? Let the citizens speak ( Matteo C. M. Casiraghi,Luigi Curini, and Alessandro Nai )                  | 243     |
| 3. Populism and the nexus of illiberalism ( Marcel Lewandowsky )                                                               | 246     |
| 4. Populist citizens do not reject liberal democracy ( Maurits Meijersand Andrej Zaslove )                                | 249     |
| 5. The myth of the typical far-right populist voter ( Daphne Halikiopoulouand Sofia Vasilopoulou )                        | 252     |
| 6. Populism and protest at the ballot box ( Alexander Langenkampand Simon Bienstman )                                     | 255     |
| 7. The populist radical right in Spain and Portugal: from the marginsto normalization ( Luca Manucci )                     | 258     |
| 8. The geography of European populism: unveiling nuances beyondstereotypes ( Mirko Crulli )                                | 261     |
| 9. Populism and rural areas: a matter of recognition ( Giovanni Carrosio )                                                     | 265     |

|                                                                                                                      |     |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 10. School and hospital closures increase support for right-wing populist parties(Niels Nyholt)                  | 268 |
| 11. Welfare chauvinism and populism. Is it the economy (stupid)?(David Andreas Bell)                             | 271 |
| 12. Exploring populist supporters' complex relationship with journalism(Clara Juarez Miro)                       | 273 |
| 13. The relationship between populism and conspiracy theories(Federico Vegetti and Moreno Mancosu)               | 276 |
| 14. Science-related populism and populist electoral performance(Fabio Bordignon)                                 | 279 |
| 15. Populist radical right voters do not have a monopoly on nostalgia!(Luca Versteegen)                          | 282 |
| 16. Activating populist attitudes in times of crisis: evidence from the CzechCOVID-19 experience (Jakub Stauber) | 285 |
| 17. What have we learned? (Petra Guasti)                                                                             | 288 |

Part VI. Impact and Consequences

|                                                                                                                   |     |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1. Understanding the illiberal challenge in Europe (Gianfranco Baldiniand Hugo Canihac)                       | 291 |
| 2. Populism and constitutional democracy (Giuseppe Martinico)                                                     | 292 |
| 3. Populists in power, constitutional change, and democratic backsliding(Jasmin Sarah König and Tilko Swalve) | 295 |
| 4. Populism in parliament and the impact on representation (David Jäger)                                          | 298 |
| 5. "The people" go to the Capitol (Lasse Thomassen)                                                               | 301 |
| 6. How populist parties survive "mainstreaming" once in power (Anca Turcu)                                        | 305 |
| 7. Do European left-wing populists in government become more moderate?(Jan Philipp Thomeczek)                 | 308 |
| 8. Populist governments as a threat from within the state (Michael Bauer)                                         | 311 |
| 9. How populists damage governments (Mauricio I. Dussauge-Laguna)                                                 | 314 |
| 10. Marching to the populist drum? The military's role in populist governance(Hakkı Taş)                      | 317 |
| 11. Populism and the public sector in Italy (Anna Longhini)                                                       | 320 |
| 12. Lost in the shuffle: local politics in populism studies (Eliška Drápalová)                                    | 324 |
| 13. Small homelands: the populist radical right, territories and localism(Elisa Bellè)                        | 327 |
| 14. We cannot ignore the populist radical-right impact on the welfare state(Juliana Chueri)                   | 330 |
| 15. Populist radical-right parties are threatening international cooperation(Motoshi Suzuki)                  | 333 |
| 16. Javier Milei: a different populist outsider (Jaroslav Bílek)                                                  | 336 |
| 17. Rights for women and gender equality under Giorgia Meloni (Alessia Donà)                                      | 339 |
| 18. Why we must resist illiberalism's attacks on higher education (Andrea Pető)                                   | 342 |

PREFACE

|                                                                                                                                             |     |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 19. Three myths about populism in international relations ( Angelos Chrysosgelos )                                                   | 348 |
| 20. Populism and foreign policy ( Fabrizio Coticchia )                                                                               | 351 |
| 21. Animosity and politics: the populist radical right in the age of affective polarization ( Sorina Soare and Mattia Zulianello )   | 354 |
| 22. Exploring tensions: affective and ideological polarization in Generation Z ( Paolo Frare, Marco Montanari and Martina Squazzin ) | 358 |
| 23. The stigmatization of the policy proposals of the populist radical right ( Niklas Bolin )                                        | 361 |
| 24. What have we learned? ( Petra Guasti )                                                                                           | 364 |
| <hr/>                                                                                                                                       |     |
| Bibliography                                                                                                                                | 367 |
| Contributors                                                                                                                                | 405 |