

Contents

Introduction to the Second Edition	xiii
Section One The Creative Process	1
Introduction.	1
CHAPTER ONE Music for Film	5
The Door: Shaping the Overall Character of a Film Score	5
Before the First Note: Thinking About Music.	6
Hitting the Spot: Putting Music Cues in Their Place	7
Making a Subtle Entrance: Beginning a Cue	9
The Hit: Underscoring Crucial Moments	10
Continuity and Contrast: Sustaining Interest with Variations in Tone	10
Economy: When Less Is More.	11
Transition: The Composer's Response to Changes	12
Tempo: The Pacing of the Score	14
Graceful Exit: When to End a Cue	16
Style: Is Film Music Different from Other Kinds of Music?.	17
Case Study: White Squall	18
CHAPTER TWO Music for Television	27
Doing TV: Music for the Small Screen	27
A Case of Homicide: Scoring a Network Cop Show (on Short Notice)	28
Changing Channels: Chicago Hope	34
Title Music: Intro Music for TV Shows.	40
The Main Theme	41

CHAPTER THREE Developing a Style	47
Critique: Learning by Doing	47
Watching Movies	50
Flexibility	53
Film Music: Voxels, Walking, and Chewing Gum.	56
Over the Top: Melodramatic Music	58
The CD is in the Mail: Analysis of a Problematic Demo	60
Workshop: More Thoughts on Demos, Plagiarism, and Conservative Choices	62
House of Style: Cultivating a Unique, Identifiable Sound	66
The Art Film: Walking on Eggshells	69
CHAPTER FOUR New Directions in Scores	77
Found Sound: Improvising and Misfit Sounds.	77
Contemporary Scoring: The Electronic Score	78
The Art of Documentary: Scoring a Nonfiction Film	83
A Thousand Roads	86
Looking Forward: Film Music for the Future.	90
Conclusion	93
Perspectives: John Williams, Carter Burwell, James Newton Howard, Wendy and Lisa (aka Wendy Melvoin and Lisa Coleman)	94
Section Two Technology	107
Introduction.	107
CHAPTER FIVE Setting Up a Studio	109
Staying Ahead of the Curve: How Much Gear Is Enough?	109
Computers: Essential Operating System Savvy	110
Sequencers: The Most Important Thing in Your Studio.	111
Samplers: An Orchestra (and More) at Your Fingertips	114
Synthesizers: An Arsenal of Electronic Sounds	115
Effects: Improving What You Have	115
Synchronization: Making the Parts Work Together	116
Mixing: The Art of Balance	116
Putting It All Together	117
Is It Enough?: Spending on Your Studio	121

Getting a Studio Tan: The Importance of a Comfortable Workspace . . .	124
CHAPTER SIX Writing the Score	127
The Paper Tiger: Generating a Printed Score	127
Conduct Yourself Accordingly: How to Control an Orchestra	134
Sounds Just Like the Real Thing: (Until You Listen to the Real Thing):
The Synthetic Approach to Orchestration	138
General Notes on the Character of Orchestral Sound.	139
Winds and Brass	141
Strings	141
Percussion	142
Harp	143
Putting Things Together	144
Loop the Loop: The Rhythms of Electronic Scoring.	145
Organization: The Unique Language of the Cue Sheet	147
Sync Up	150
When Your Music is Married to Film	150
Playback	150
Timecode	151
Delivering Your Final Mixes.	153
The Etiquette of Reel Changes	153
CHAPTER SEVEN Recording the Score	155
Working with Actual (Not Virtual) Musicians.	155
The White Squall Recording Sessions	156
Keeping the Musicians in Time.	156
Making the Transition from Home Studio to Pro Studio	157
Recording the Orchestra.	158
Making Repairs	160
Tracking Completed	160
Editing and Mixing White Squall	163
On to the Dub Stage	165
Samples Run Through It:
Creating Samples and Loops for Mark Isham	166
Walk like an Egyptian: Working with Exotic Musicians	169
In the Mix: Beyond Stereo to Surround	172

Smells like Team Spirit: The Music Editor.	174
Sounds Good to Me: The Film Score Mixer.	181
Perspectives: Hans Zimmer, Mark Isham, Basil Poledouris, Marc Shaimen	187

Section Three Career 201

Introduction.	201
-----------------------	-----

CHAPTER EIGHT Beginning a Career 203

How Do I Get Started in Film Scoring?	203
Live Where You Work.	204
How Important Is a University Music Degree?	204
Windows of Opportunity	205
Apprenticing with a Successful Composer	206
Ghost of a Chance	207
The Demo	208
The Makings of a Good Demo	209
Genre Showcase	209
Melodies: Concise, Focused, and Memorable	210
Variety: The Spice of a Diverse Sequence	210
Plagiarists Need Not Apply	211
Including Appropriate Material	211
Your Demo Reflects Your Abilities	212
Credits Where Credit Is Due	212
Be Yourself.	213
Judging a Book by its Cover	214
Online Demos.	214
The List: More Advice on Getting a Start in the Film World	214
Learning by Doing: Ten Things I've Learned from Other Film Composers.	218
Agents: Having a Representative on Your Side	222

CHAPTER NINE Career Challenges. 225

Orchestral Maneuvers in the Dark: My First Score for Live Orchestra	225
Sizing up Needs.	226
Working on a Tight Schedule	227
At the Studio	229
Making the Producers Happy.	230

Fired: When Bad Things Happen to Good Composers	232
Letting Go: Two Examples of How Not to Deal with Film Producers . . .	236
So, Are You Up to Speed?: How to Get a Lot Done in a Very Short Time .	240
Explaining Impossible Deadlines	241
The Politics of Dancing: The Diplomacy of Scoring.	244
Other Peoples' Problems	245
Someone to Watch Over You: The Lawyer	246
Who Are You: Are You the Right Person for the Project?	247
A New Director, a New Relationship.	248
On the Other Hand.	250
 CHAPTER TEN Making a Living	253
Dollars and Sense.	253
How Composers Make Money
Fees, Packages, Licenses, and Royalties.	254
Calculating Expenses	256
Sweetening the Pot.	257
Royalties and Performing Rights Societies	259
Who Pays the Composer?	262
Television Music	264
A Few Other Opportunities	265
The Musicians Union	266
Contracting Music Groups:
An Interview with David Low, Music Contractor	267
Agents of Change:
An Interview with John Tempereau, Composer's Agent	272
Songs for Films:
An Interview with Chris Douridas, Music Supervisor	277
The Executive Suite:
An Interview with Robert Kraft, Film Studio Music Executive.	283
Conclusion	294
 Epilogue The Day the Earth Didn't Stand Still	295
Appendix Thinking in Reel Time	300
Resources	305
Index	309