PART ONE: 1917–1941	1
----------------------------	---

1 Music and silent cinema. The alternative: pianist versus composer	3
2 Evolution from the silent to the sound film. The duality of music during this transitional period in film history.	13
3 General characteristics of the main types of musical dramaturgy in the 1930s and early '40s.	19
4 The symphonic type of dramaturgy.	21
5 The role of music in creating a mythicised image of socialism. Song in the service of ideology: the musical film comedies of Alexandrov and Pyriev.	31
6 The formation of other genres in musical cinema.	49
7 The development of film music in the cinema of the Soviet Republics.	53
8 Elaboration of the idea of sound-visual counterpoint in the film Alexander Nevsky .	59

PART TWO: 1941–1958	69
----------------------------	----

9 The fortunes of film music in the hard times of the War.	71
10 Problems of 'song' film.	79
11 Extending the bounds of the musical film: initial steps towards mastering the genres of film-opera and film-operetta.	89
12 A breakthrough in sound-visual cinema: Ivan the Terrible by Eisenstein and Prokofiev.	91
13 Music in the post-war cinema of the late forties and early fifties. The period of imposed compromise and conformism.	115
14 Crisis in the genre of musical comedy film.	117
15 Music in the role of step-daughter. Multiple music clichés in the genre of biographical film.	121

16	Russian classical opera and ballet in the cinema of the '50s: new attempts at relationships.	125
17	The ideological function of music in the war film.	127
18	A wind of change: film music of the post-Stalinist period.	133
19	Music in screen versions of works from world literature.	137
PART THREE: 1959–1969		143
20	Change of fortune. New means of expression in the language of film music. Evolution from sound-musical illustration towards the creation of an integral film sound-world.	145
21	Song in the cinema of the '60s. Crystallization of a monothematic model in the musical drama of the song film.	151
22	The mixed and chamber types of musical dramaturgy.	157
23	Music by Nadezhda Simonyan and Dmitry Shostakovich in film versions of Chekhov and Shakespeare.	167
24	An upsurge of interest in musical cinema. Ways of solving the problem of 'cinema and opera'. Katerina Izmailova by Shostakovich and Shapiro.	185
25	The zenith of musical achievements in the directors' cinema of the '60s: music for the films The Shadows of Our Forgotten Ancestors , Andrei Rublev and No Ford in the Fire .	193
PART FOUR: 1970–1985		211
26	The rise and fall of film music in the period of stagnation. The problem of choice: the semi-official film, the commercial 'hit' or auteur cinema.	213
27	Human tragedy as reflected in film music.	221
28	Extending the expressive means of film music. A search for new models of stylistic interaction between music and the other components of screen synthesis.	229
29	Breakthrough into the future: film music in the work of Artemyev, Schnittke and Gubaidulina in the 1980s.	249
30	The cinema musical: a change in orientation. A transition from the classics to the revue film and the musical. The first Soviet screening of a rock-opera.	259
PART FIVE: 1986–1991		271
31	'Black wave' aesthetics and music. The crisis of film music under conditions of intellectual and spiritual depression in society, and the development of tough naturalist cinema in the period of the disintegration of the Soviet Union.	273

32	The innovative experiments of Alexander Sokurov and Andrei Chernykh: creating a multi-layered polyphonic sound score, and a 'musical' film without music.	281
