CHARACTERISTICS OF ELIZABETHAN DRAMA	12

Unique character of Elizabethan drama—Basis of Greek drama was the chorus—Its uses later: (1) chorus as hero, (2) view of average person, (3) view of poet, (4) to give relief; for (1) and (2) inadequate substitutes in English drama—Poet's standpoint given by the Induction and the Fool—The Induction—The improvising Fool—Shakespeare's Fool—(4) Relief, is it provided by comic scenes?—Catastrophe in Greek plays related by messenger, in Elizabethan acted—Minor catastrophes by messenger—Greek practice due to origin, not for avoidance of horrible—Physical horror in "Lear"—Curtainless theatre makes deaths on stage in large numbers impossible except at end—Greek catastrophe two-thirds through, English at end—Shakespeare's third acts—Explanation of the blinding of Gloucester—Traditional forms in English drama permit of greater subtlety of characterization—Borrowing of stage situations—Traditional dresses—Doubling of parts in early plays—Additional speeches—Dumb shows—Use of theory of drama—Three characteristics of tragedy—Why should the tragic catastrophe produce æsthetic pleasure?—Aristotle and the "purgation"—Marlowe's tragic satisfaction—Greatness of man—Shakespeare not clear—Hints for reading—Histories deal with the compromise of life—The undying hero of the nation—Variety in Comedy—Character of Romances—Natural development—"Comedy of Errors" a farce—Court Comedies—Shakespeare's conception of Comedy.

History of early drama (Greg)—Liturgical plays pass into hands of the Guilds—Representation—Texts in which mysteries have come down—"Morals"—"Interludes"—Chronicle History—King John Plays—Shakespeare natural development, but element of romance not accounted for—Munday's Robin Hood Plays.
Comedy—Origins not clear—Comic element in mysteries—Gammer Gurton—Latin Comedy—Entertainment of royal persons—Peele's "Arraignment of Paris"—Lyly develops this line—Element of English country life in Greene, but he apparently indebted to Munday.
Tragedy—Marlowe not chief begetter of Shakespearean tragedy—Mysteries tragic in theme, but mediæval use of word obscured the connexion—Elizabethan tragedy really linked with tragedies of Chaucer's "Monk" through Lydgate's "Falls of Princes"—Sackville's "Mirror for Magistrates"—His "Gorboduc"—Unsuited for the stage—Obscure dramatists combine classical stories with methods of mysteries—Edwards's plays on theme of friendship—Hughes's "Misfortunes of Arthur" predecessor of "Spanish Tragedy"—Connexion of "Hamlet" and "Macbeth" with this sort of drama—"J. Cæsar" related to Edwards's themes—Love tragedy such as "Romeo and Juliet" something of a "sport"—Possibly Shakespeare's most creative effort.

IV

THE PREDECESSORS

48

Elizabethan comedy very specially centred in Shakespeare—Jonson only exception—Lyly fixes type of Court Comedy—Nature of Lyly's character-drawing—Humour probably more amusing with child-actors—Shakespeare's debts to Lyly—Stratification in his plays—Grouping in "Midsummer Night's Dream"—Lyly's disfavour at Court—Greene's importance questioned—His women the first really good women of rank—Mystery of Peele—His "Arraignment" above—Early publication—"David and Bethsabe"—"Battle of Alcazar"—"Edward I"—"Old Wives' Tale"—Looks like conscious artistic theory—Marlowe—Relation to Shakespeare—Theme, the infinite spirit of man—Marlowe's "Superman"—Shakespeare's view of type in "Richard III"—Classical form in "Richard III"—"Richard II" and "Edward II" compared—Marlowe and Renaissance spirit—Each play asserts value of some earthly good—Problem of Faustus—Apparent orthodoxy—Conflict of Conscience—Discussion of authorship of "Edward III"—Summary—Countess scenes to Greene or Shakespeare—In second part attitude is that of Peele—Passages reminiscent of Marlowe—And of Shakespeare—Shakespeare as reviser on lines of "David and Bethsabe"—Plays compared—Work of Marlowe embedded—Craftsman attitude.

THE REVENGE PLAY 65

All tragedies before 1600 Revenge dramas and descended from Greek—Story of Œdipus—Influence of Œdipus and Orestes on Seneca—Senecan influence on Elizabethans in episodes and form—On tragic hero and ethical thought—Hercules and Atreus—Atreus's connexion with Hamlet's idea that he "lacks gall to make oppression bitter"—Plot of "Spanish Tragedy"—Hieronimo's delay due to his aged fear of death—Early Hamlet also afraid—"Antonio's Revenge" typical Revenge play—Sketch—Compared to "Macbeth"—Marston's life—"A Woman killed with Kindness"—"Tragedy of Hoffmann"—Tourneur—Evolution complete.

SHAKESPEARE'S TREATMENT—"Hamlet"—Three versions—Source of the copy of three versions—Peculiarities of First Quarto—Weakness of "Hamlet" plot—Laertes—The current contemporary view of "Hamlet."

VI

THE APOCRYPHA AND MUNDAY 83

Munday and Apocrypha both treated in spirit of inquiry—Reasons for cloud over Munday—His own reputation—Collier the literary forger his first editor—"The English Romayne Life"—"Zelauto"—Official spy and city poet—Munday and the Robin Hood legend—"As You Like It" and Robin Hood nebula—Shakespeare's comedy a combination of folk-play and a literary source—"Twelfth Night"—"Midsummer Night's Dream"—Wilson's Prologue about plays not to be acted—Early plays like mimetic games?—Paris Garden—Early drama a variety entertainment—The bear in "Mucedorus" and "Winter's Tale"—"Mucedorus's" likeness to Shakespeare's romances points to early date of latter—Other evidence—Romances belong to 1584-93 (?)—The Apocryphal plays—Authority of First Folio—Problem of "Troilus and Cressida"—The contradictory statements in the Quartos—A lost tragic "Troilus" play?—Short plays in series—"The Plotte of the Seven Deadly Sins"—"Pericles" possibly part of another sequence of the Deadly Sins—All the romances, with "Two Noble Kinsmen," "Troilus" and "Yorkshire Tragedy," originally part of such series plays—Links in connexion with mediæval triumvirate, Chaucer, Gower, Lydgate—Subject of Kinsmen also points to early period—Recapitulation.

VII

THE CONTEMPORARIES:

I. BEN JONSON 95

Difficulty of appreciating—His fame in his own day—Mixture of prose and poetry—"Every Man in his Humour"—

View of comedy—Bergson's view of the ridiculous—Example—Jonson's comedy fits this explanation—His "plotting" consists in bringing his Humorous persons together—Applied to "Alchemist"—"Volpone" on same lines—Meaning of "Humours"—Contemporary portraits—The "War of the Theatres"—Why did feeling run so high?—"The Poetaster"—Jonson a "translator"—The Roman plays—"Bartholomew Fair" and Dickens—Jonson's grossness—The amazing contrast of his Masques—"The Masque of Queens"—"Of Blackness"—Effect on Comedy—Taste of the Stuarts.

II. CHAPMAN 104

Chapman's variety—Difficulty of his expression—Influence of Donne—"Bussy D'Ambois" and Byron plays—Bussy's brother the Hamlet type—Bussy and Byron—Supermen—Peculiar standards on the subject of love—"M. d'Olive" mediæval in a way—Chapman's effort to portray ideal gentlemen—Sidney and the secret love relation—Spenser's third and fourth books of the "Faerie Queene" deal with love and friendship—Chapman not much interested in women—Achilles of Iliad and Earl of Essex Chapman's models—Insight in delineation of Byron—Mysticism in "Gentleman Usher"—Chapman points on to Milton.

III. DEKKER 111

Dekker's hard life and optimistic views—Lack of unity in his plays—"Satiromastix"—Looseness of other plays due to unsuitability of form—His unity that of the novel not of the drama—"Old Fortunatus"—Dekker's sympathy with Fortunatus's choice—Men's business to live a full and brave life—"Shoemaker's Holiday"—His vindication of the tradesmen class—"Witch of Edmonton"—The Witch a lonely old woman—The story of Frank—Likeness to Dickens's murderers.

VIII

THE SUCCESSORS:

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER 122

Important point is relation to Shakespeare—Use Shakespeare's themes but change in accordance with conditions of time—"Philaster" examined—Founded on "Hamlet"—Hesitation due to love—Nature of his melancholy—Insincerity of sentiment—"Maid's Tragedy"—Amintor another Hamlet copy—Attitude to King—Melantius compared to Laertes—Evadne's motive—Amintor's treatment of Aspatia due to Hamlet's of Ophelia—Beauty of single scenes—Example in "Thierry and Theodoret"—"Bouduca"—"Faithful Shepherdess"—"The Knight of the Burning Pestle"—Only possible in decadent drama—

Unwholesome morality of Beaumont and Fletcher's stage
—Romance ending of Shakespeare compared with Beaumont and Fletcher's.

IX

THE DECADENTS:

MASSINGER, MIDDLETON, WEBSTER, AND FORD . 131

Post-Shakespearean drama and comedy point to rise of the Puritan middle-class—Massinger's claim of the moral value of the stage—"The City Madam"—"New Way to pay Old Debts" same type—Massinger a Roman Catholic —Massinger's view of Humour—In "The Roman Actor"—
Women the cause of all men's sins—"Virgin Martyr"— Resemblance to "Morals"—Greater liberality of Middleton, Ford, and Webster—Middleton's "Fair Quarrel"—
"The Changeling"—The great scene with De Flores—Middleton's view of protected and selfish women of upper classes—Independence of Middleton—Webster's democratic tendency—"The White Devil"—Macabre quality—Unity of "Duchess of Malfi"—Compared with story in Painter—
Use of madhouse scenes.

Ford a Jacobean Shelley—With Ford perfect sincerity is test of virtue—"The Broken Heart"—"Perkin Warbeck" a study of effect of continued deception.
