
CONTENTS

Foreword

1. Aristotle's Coercive System of Tragedy

Introduction

Art Imitates Nature

What is the Meaning of "Imitation"?

What, then, is the Purpose of Art and Science?

Major Arts and Minor Arts

What does Tragedy Imitate?

What is Happiness?

And What is Virtue?

Necessary Characteristics of Virtue

The Degrees of Virtue

What is Justice?

In What Sense can Theater Function as an Instrument for Purification and Intimidation?

The Ultimate Aim of Tragedy

A Short Glossary of Simple Words

How Aristotle's Coercive System of Tragedy Functions

Different Types of Conflict: Hamartia and Social Ethos

Conclusion

Notes

2. Machiavelli and the Poetics of Virtù

The Feudal Abstraction
 The Bourgeois Concretion
 Machiavelli and Mandragola
 Modern Reductions of Virtù
 Notes

3. Hegel and Brecht: The Character as Subject or the Character as Object?

The "Epic" Concept
 Types of Poetry in Hegel
 Characteristics of Dramatic Poetry,
 Still According to Hegel
 Freedom of the Character-Subject
 A Word Poorly Chosen
 Does Thought Determine Being (or Vice Versa)?
 Can Man be Changed?
 Conflict of Wills or Contradiction of Needs?
 Empathy or What? Emotion or Reason?
 Catharsis and Repose, or Knowledge and Action?
 How to Interpret the New Works?
 The Rest Does not Count: They are Minor
 Formal Differences Between the Three Genres
 Empathy or Osmosis
 Notes

4. Poetics of the Oppressed

Experiments with the People's Theater in Peru
 Conclusion: "Spectator," a Bad Word!
 Notes

5. Development of the Arena Theater of São Paulo

Need for the "Joker"
 Goals of the "Joker"
 Structures of the "Joker"

Appendices