

Table of Contents

Editorial Foreword	xi
Foreword	xiii
Preface	xix
Select List of Abbreviations	xxiii
Table of Cases	xxvii
Introduction	1
1. Scope of the research	3
2. Some issues of methodology	7
Chapter 1 International Law and Transformative Occupation: A Historical Perspective	11
1. Occupation as conquest and exploitation	14
1.1. The Roman law tradition and its influence up to the Modern Age	14
1.2. The French occupation of the Rhineland (1794–1801)	17
2. Occupation as control and administration of territory	18
2.1. Occupation and sovereignty	19
2.2. The distinction between belligerent states and private individuals	26
2.3. The Prussian occupation of Alsace-Lorraine (August 1870–February 1871)	31
2.4. The process of codification	34
3. Occupation as transformation	36
3.1. The concept and its origin	36

3.2. From 'liberation' to political independence	40
3.2.1. The Russian occupation of Bulgaria (1877–1878)	40
3.2.2. The British occupation of Mesopotamia and the Mandate (1914–1932)	45
(a) The occupation (1914–1920)	45
(b) The Mandate (1920–1932)	51
3.3. From surrender to the establishment of 'democratic institutions'	57
3.3.1. The Allied Powers' occupation of Germany (1945–1949)	58
3.3.2. The Allied Powers' occupation of Japan (1945–1952)	64
4. Occupation as implementation of a 'humanitarian agenda': the Geneva Convention IV and Additional Protocol I	68
5. Conclusion	72
Chapter 2 International Law and Transformative Occupation: Contemporary Challenges	75
1. The development of the international law applicable to an occupation	76
1.1 The issue of the legality of the existence of an occupation	79
1.2. The applicability of human rights law	83
1.3. The coordination between human rights law and international humanitarian law	91
2. Some contemporary arguments for transformative occupation	96
2.1. Advancing human rights	96
2.2. Enabling self-determination	102
3. Conclusion	107
Chapter 3 The Occupation of Iraq (2003–5)	109
1. Chronology of key events	110
2. The legal status of the Coalition Forces in Iraq in April 2003	113
2.1. Occupation versus debellatio	113
2.2. The establishment of the occupation	117
2.3. The existence of an occupation in Iraq as of mid-April 2003	128
3. The status of the Coalition Forces during the looting of Baghdad	131
3.1. Key events	132
3.2. The extent of the Coalition Forces' control over Baghdad	134
4. The role of the Office of Reconstruction and Humanitarian Assistance	144

5.	The Coalition Provisional Authority	147
5.1.	The CPA as an occupation administration: legal basis and structure	147
5.2.	The CPA's purposes: nation-transformation	150
5.3.	The CPA's self-definition of its authority and objectives: Regulation 1	157
6.	Security Council Resolution 1483: framing the role of the main actors in the Iraqi crisis	159
6.1.	The quest for a Security Council resolution by the occupying powers	159
6.2.	The status and functions of the CPA	161
6.2.1.	Reappraising the legality of the CPA's presence in Iraq	162
6.2.2.	Authorities, responsibilities, and limits	170
(a)	The CPA's 'political' tasks: a derogation from the law of occupation?	176
(b)	The administration of Iraqi oil	183
6.3.	The role of the United Nations	186
6.4.	The role of the Iraqi people	189
6.4.1.	The ambit of the Iraqi people's right to self-determination	189
6.4.2.	A position of subordination	191
6.4.3.	The Security Council and the right to self-determination	193
(a)	Enablement of the right to self-determination or breach?	198
(b)	Internal self-determination and Saddam Hussein's regime	200
7.	Conclusion	203

Chapter 4	Occupation as Transformation: The Practice of the CPA	205
1.	The dismantling of Saddam Hussein's regime	206
1.1.	The de-Ba'athification of Iraqi society	206
1.2.	Dissolution of entities	211
1.3.	Assessment	214
2.	The duty to restore 'conditions of security and stability'	224
2.1.	Control of weapons	228
2.2.	The criminalisation of specific conduct and the harshening of penalties	230
2.3.	The effort to restrain private militias	233
2.4.	The attitude towards private contractors	238
2.5.	The attitude of Coalition Forces towards the Iraqis	241
2.6.	The creation of new Iraqi security forces	244
2.7.	Assessment	248

3.	The administration and reform of the judicial system	250
3.1.	Amending existing legislation: the influence of human rights law	250
3.2.	The establishment of new courts	255
3.2.1.	The Iraqi Special Tribunal	257
3.2.2.	The trial of Saddam Hussein	264
3.3.	The management and supervision of detention facilities	268
4.	The political and constitutional process to transform Iraq into a democracy	276
4.1.	The role of the Iraqi Governing Council	277
4.2.	Sistani's fatwa against the drafting of a constitution by a non-elected body	292
4.3.	Security Council Resolution 1511: moving democratisation forward	295
4.3.1.	The 15 November Agreement between the IGC and the CPA	298
4.3.2.	A breach of the right to self-determination?	301
4.4.	The UN involvement in determining date and modalities of the elections	305
4.5.	The Law of Administration for the State of Iraq for the Transitional Period	309
4.5.1.	Content	309
4.5.2.	Assessment	319
5.	The transformation of the Iraqi economy	323
5.1.	Opening Iraq to foreign investments	325
5.2.	Financial, fiscal, and labor reforms	327
5.3.	Auditing and best financial practices	331
5.4.	Evaluation	332
6.	Conclusion	339
Chapter 5	The Democratisation of Iraq after the Demise of the CPA	345
1.	The legal effects of the CPA's legislation after its demise	347
2.	The formation of the Interim Government	349
3.	The content and effects of Resolution 1546	351
3.1.	Upholding the timetable of transition to a democratic constitution	352
3.2.	The Invitation to the Multinational Force	355
4.	The scholarly debate	357
4.1.	Whether the Interim Government was sovereign	360
4.2.	Whether the recognition by the Security Council may override the lack of internal sovereignty	367

4.3. The International practice	369
4.4. The status of the Multinational Force	374
4.4.1. The Multinational Force's relationship with the Interim Government and the Iraqi people	376
4.4.2. The Multinational Force's relationship with UNAMI	379
4.5. The Practice of the Interim Government: a 'caretaker'?	381
5. Towards full sovereignty: the practice of the elected Iraqi governments	385
5.1. The Jaafari Government (April 2005–May 2006)	385
5.2. The adoption of a permanent constitution (October 2005)	388
5.2.1. Content	388
5.2.2. A foreign-imposed constitution?	399
5.3. The Maliki Government (May 2006–re-elected in 2010)	404
6. The Withdrawal of the Multinational Force	408
7. Conclusion	409
 Chapter 6 International Law and Transformative Occupation after Iraq	 413
1. Break from or continuum with the past?	415
1.1. A comparison with the occupation of Mesopotamia and the subsequent Mandate	415
1.1.1. Some similarities and differences	416
1.1.2. Self-determination as a limit to constitutional processes	420
1.2. A comparison with the Allied Powers' occupation of Germany and Japan	423
2. The occupation of Iraq as precedent	429
2.1. The irreplaceable function of the law of occupation	429
2.2. Should aspects of the law of occupation be amended?	432
2.3. Transformative occupation and international territorial administration	436
2.4. Transformative occupation and jus post bellum	442
2.5. Whether the Security Council should support pro-democratic transformative occupations	451
 Bibliography	 459
 Index	 505