

Contents

Part I. A Central Problem of Political Obligation	I
1. The Membership Problem	3
1.1. The problem	3
1.2. Four distinct questions	18
2. Obligations: Preliminary Points	26
2.1. The variety of obligations	26
2.2. Initial assumptions about obligation	27
2.3. Directed obligations	35
2.4. Imputed obligations	41
3. In Pursuit of a Theory of Political Obligation	43
3.1. Desiderata for a theory of political obligation	43
3.2. Some less than promising notions of membership	53
4. Actual Contract Theory: Attractions	55
4.1. Actual contract theory	55
4.2. Analytic attractions	57
4.3. Moral attractions	64
5. Objections to Actual Contract Theory	70
5.1. The no-agreement objection	70
5.2. The no-obligation objection	75
5.3. Other objections	83
5.4. Actual contract theory assessed	86
5.5. Some proposed alternatives to actual contract theory	87
Part II. Societies, Membership, and Obligation	91
6. Social Groups: Starting Small	93
6.1. Societies as social groups	93
6.2. Acting together: observations	101
6.3. How joint action comes about	116
6.4. The need for a theory	121

X CONTENTS

7. Joint Commitment and Obligation	125
7.1. Commitment	125
7.2. Joint commitment	134
7.3. Acting together	146
7.4. Joint commitment and obligation	147
8. Societies as Plural Subjects	165
8.1. The range of plural subjects	165
8.2. Plural subjects and common ideas about social groups	167
8.3. Large populations as plural subjects	173
Part III. A Solution to the Membership Problem	183
9. Political Societies	185
9.1. Social rules: Hart's account	185
9.2. Three issues for an account of social rules	195
9.3. Social rules: a plural subject account	197
9.4. Three forms of political institution	204
10. Reconsidering Actual Contract Theory	215
10.1. What is an agreement? The joint decision proposal	215
10.2. Agreements and promises as a source of obligation	223
10.3. Moral argument around the promise	227
10.4. Implications for actual contract theory	234
11. The Plural Subject Theory of Political Obligation	238
11.1. The theory assessed	238
11.2. Comparison with three related theories	260
11.3. Response to objections	266
11.4. The practical import of political obligations	275
12. Summary and Prospect	287
12.1. Summary	287
12.2. Prospect	293
Bibliography	298
Index	307