

Table of Contents

Preface	xi
PART I The Basic Idea	1
1. The State as a Structure of Intelligibility	3
1. Two ways of thinking about politics	4
2. State and government	8
3. Institutions and intelligibility	13
4. The priority of ideas in a world of cause and effect	24
5. The several senses of the ontological state	28
6. Political practice and the theory of the state	33
PART II Philosophical Foundations of the State	39
2. Politics, Prudence and Philosophy	41
1. Theories of government and the philosophy of the state	42
2. Prudential and philosophical argument	50
3. Hobbesian metaphysics	58
4. The impossibility of a “political” conception	72
5. The reasonable and the rational	83
6. Reasons	90
3. The Post-Kantian Convergence	94
1. Coherence and ontology	95
2. Objectivity	105
3. The unity of philosophy	117
4. Human action and ontological commitment	127
5. Social institutions and the idea of the state	138
PART III The Idea of the State	147
4. The Omnicompetent State: Toleration and Limited Government	149
1. The argument from impossibility	151
2. Liberal toleration	163

3. The omniscient state	176
4. Ordinary politics and political philosophy	187
5. The Absolute State: Authority and Resistance	194
1. The autonomy argument	195
2. Obligation, ought and duty	200
3. The idea of political obligation	212
4. The absolute state	226
5. Resistance	232
6. The problem of civil disobedience	254
6. The Organic State: Democracy and Freedom	266
1. Inequality and democratic government	267
2. The organic state	282
3. Universalization	293
4. Moral freedom and the state	303
Index	325