

CONTENT

Preface	7
Introduction	9
I. Life-long Learning as a Framework for Human Resources Development	15
I.1 The Concept of Life-long Learning in Developed Countries	15
I.2 Initial Education as Preparation for Life-long Learning	19
I.2.1 Access to Education, Possibilities and Limits of Educational Paths	19
I.2.2 Changes in Educational Content	22
I.2.3 Tertiary Education: Challenge for the Future	26
I.2.4 Changes in Management and Evaluation – Is Feedback Sufficient?	27
I.2.5 The Human Factor in the Provision of Education and Its Motivation	29
I.2.6 Political Visions – Can They Be Fulfilled?	31
I.3 Continuing Education in Modern Society	34
I.3.1 The Importance of Continuing Education in Developed Societies	34
I.3.2 Types of Continuing Education	36
I.3.2.1 In-Service Training in Companies	37
I.3.2.2 Re-Training	42
I.3.2.3 Part-time Studies in Schools	44
I.3.2.4 Education as “Interest”	46
I.3.3 Adult Education in the Czech Republic: Problem or Positive Future Development?	46
I.4 Recommendations Concerning the Development of Lifelong Learning	49
II. Human Resources in the Labour Market	53
II.1 Developed Countries – The Objective is the Employability of the Population	53
II.2 Growing Question Marks in the Czech Labour Market	57
II.2.1 The Development and Structures of the Labour Market	57
II.2.1.1 The Professional Structure of the Economically Active Population	60
II.2.2 Relationship between Education and Employment	62
II.2.2.1 Employment Requirements and the Level of Education	62
II.2.2.2 How Education and Field Affect Employability	65
II.2.3 From the Education System to the World of Labour	68
II.2.3.1 The Position of School Graduates	68
II.2.3.2 Unemployed Graduates	73
II.2.3.3 What Can Facilitate Transfer from School to Employment	78
II.2.4 From Employment Policy to Labour Market Policy	82
II.3 Recommendations to Improve the Position of Human Resources in the Labour Market	86

III. Human Capital and Functional Literacy	91
III.1 Functional Literacy – Human Capital Indicator	91
III.1.1 Is it Possible to Measure Functional Literacy?	93
III.1.2 How High is Functional Literacy in the CR in Comparison with the World?	93
III.2 Is Functional Literacy a Source of Success and Social Promotion?	96
III.2.1 Complexity of Work in International Comparison	98
III.2.2 “The more languages you know, the more you are a human being” (Czech saying)	99
III.2.3 Causes in Social Inequality and Educational Content	101
III.3 What Measures Can Be Recommended to Raise Functional Literacy Levels?	104
IV. Human Resources Motivational Mechanisms	107
IV.1 The Dynamics of Differences in Salaries and Their Determination	108
IV.1.1 The Implementation of a Functional Remuneration Mechanism	108
IV.1.2 Changes in Salary Differentiation After 1989	108
IV.1.3 Changes in Income Factors	111
IV.1.4 Influence of Functional Literacy	117
IV.2 Work, Education and “Life Success”	118
IV.2.1 Value Environment of Human Resources	118
IV.2.2 Factors for “Life Success”	118
IV.2.3 Values of Work and Happiness at Work	122
IV.2.4 Preferred Type of Work and Loyalty to the Employer	124
IV.3 Qualification as a Factor in Remuneration and Human Development	127
IV.3.1 Income Factors from the Employee’s Point of View	127
IV.3.2 Opinion of Remuneration in Terms of Employee Characteristics	128
IV.3.3 Application of Qualification and Knowledge	130
IV.4 The Institutional Environment: The Social Network and The Unemployment Trap	134
IV.4.1 Building A New System	134
IV.4.2 Taxation: The “Tax Wedge”	135
IV.4.3 The “Unemployment Trap”	138
IV.5 What Can Help in the Area of Values and Remuneration?	142
Conclusion: How to Continue with the Development of Human Resources in the Czech Republic	144