About the Authors .....	449

We have had the companionship of many fine people on the journey that has resulted in this book. We are especially grateful to those who helped us develop our ideas about writing dissertations throughout the years—Sonya's graduate students, those who have attended our Scholars' Retreats and workshops, and the students with whom we have worked as coaches. Marianne DiPietro of Western Michigan University deserves a special note of thanks for helping us think in new ways about how our ideas could be applied and for providing us with many opportunities to develop and test our ideas.

Karen A. Foss and Melissa McCalla Manassee read our chapters and gave us comments that significantly improved the book. Karen A. Foss, Stephen W. Littlejohn, and Teri Tapp offered ideas that were particularly helpful in conceptualizing chapter 11, and Anthony J. Radich provided a key idea for chapter 10. Raquel Vasquez's delightful drawings in chapters 5 and 7 helped us communicate our processes more clearly. Brigid McAuliffe made us look good in the photograph on the back cover.

We appreciate the willingness of the scholars whose samples we have included in the book to share their work. Their excellent models will make the journeys of others easier. Thanks to Bernard J.
