

"Critical in its dialogue with neighboring disciplines, empirically grounded and self-reflexive, imbued with a keen sense of history and an awareness of the dilemmas facing academics and activists alike in the field of human rights, this remarkable collection brings together some of the best recent scholarship in anthropology on the subject."

Shalini Randeria
University of Zurich

"This excellent volume offers at once a wide-ranging and an acutely critical take on a topic of increasing global significance."

John Comaroff
University of Chicago

"No praise is high enough for this astonishing anthology, which brings some rare gifts towards a renewed understanding of human rights from the platforms of critical anthropology."

Upendra Baxi
University of Warwick

"This is a spectacularly valuable and enlightening anthology ... The collection really is essential reading for anyone seriously interested in a deeper understanding of the challenges and pitfalls of promoting human rights."

Philip Alston
New York University School of Law

Human Rights: An Anthropological Reader is a groundbreaking collection on the understanding and practice of human rights over the past 60 years. For decades, anthropologists have drawn on a range of intellectual and methodological approaches in order to reveal both the ambiguities and tremendous potential of the postwar human rights project. This volume synthesizes these different approaches and demonstrates how anthropologists have engaged with human rights as committed activists, empirical researchers, and cultural critics. By examining and drawing out the broader implications of this continuing legacy for the twenty-first century, this text serves as an essential resource for researchers, practitioners, and students of human rights.

Mark Goodale is Assistant Professor of Conflict Analysis and Anthropology at George Mason University. He is the Series Editor of Stanford Studies in Human Rights and the author of The Anthropology of Human Rights: Critical Explorations in Ethical Theory and Social Practice (2008) and Dilemmas of Modernity: Bolivian Encounters with Law and Liberalism (2008). He is the coeditor of The Practice of Human Rights: Tracking Law Between the Global and the Local (2007) and Practicing Ethnography in Law: New Dialogues, Enduring Methods (2002).
