

---

Contents

	Foreword, by Ludwig Landgrebe	ix
	Introduction	3
1	Stating the Problem	6
	1. The Naive Life-World and the World of Science	7
	2. The Impact of the Scientific Worldview on Our Life-Feeling	9
	3. Attempt at a Historical Typology of Possible Solutions to the Problem. Berkeley, Reid, Jacobi, Goethe. Modern Positivism: Avenarius, Mach, Bertrand Russell, Carnap, Wittgenstein, Physicalism.	11
	4. Anticipating Our Own Proposed Solution. The Transcendental Theory of Experience Is in a Position to Reconcile the Supposed Opposites. Subjectivism as against All Sorts of Objectivism.	19
2	The Question of the Essence of Subjectivity and Its Methodical Exploitation	23
	1. Descartes's Cogito Cogitans and Cogito Cogitatum	23
	2. Kant's I of Transcendental Apperception and Empirical I	24
	3. Fichte's Creative I and Finite I. Fichte's Subjective Method Is Synthetic.	28
	4. Absolute Subjectivity and the Dialectical Method. Is the Essence of Subjectivity Identical with the I? Schelling.	31
	5. Schelling's and Hegel's "Absolute Skepticism." The Realization of This Idea in the Phenomenological Epochē and Reduction.	34
	6. The Method of Phenomenology Is Analytic and Descriptive. Reduction Is Not a Method for Acquiring Eidetic Cognitions. The Method of Guiding Clues. Constitution and Its Problems. Eidetic Intuition.	41
	7. The Objection of Solipsism. Transcendental Intersubjectivity as the Presently Attained Stage of the Subjective Reduction.	48

3	The Natural World	52
1.	Description of the Situation of Man in the World. The Form of Being-in-the-World. Home and Alien. The Temporal Dimension of the World. The Subjective and Mood Dimensions of the World.	53
2.	Reference to the Historical Development of the Problem. Kant, Wilhelm von Humboldt, Dilthey, Simmel, Husserl, Heidegger, etc.	60
3.	The Subjective Attitude. The Concepts of Act- and Horizon-Intentionality.	63
4.	The Concept of Horizon Already Anticipated prior to Husserl: Kant, Droysen	66
5.	Attempt at a Constitutive Sketch of the Genesis of the Naive World. Time as the Constitutive Basis. Original Time, Distinct from World-Time, Is Retention and Creation. The Process of Constitution Is Punctuated by the Process of the Objectification of Time. Progression: Qualitativeness, Space, Thing.	67
6.	The Fundamental Tendencies Guiding the Articulation of Experience Are the Dispositional and the Communicative Tendency	78
4	A Sketch of a Philosophy of Language and Speech	85
1.	Description of Language Comprehension, Disposing of Language (Speech), and the Phenomenon of Language Itself	86
2.	An Attempted Ideal Genesis of Language. Language Possible Only by Virtue of the Fact That Man Lives as a Free I.	93
3.	Passive Experience and Its Mastering by Thought through Language	98
4.	The Sensible Aspect of Language	101
5.	Language as Objective Meaning: The Thought-Schema and Its Mirroring in Language	105
5	Conclusion	112
	Proper Theory Becomes Possible Only on the Basis of Language. Outlook on the Genesis of Theory and, in specie , of Modern Science
	Supplement to the Second Czech Edition (1970): "The Natural World" Reditated Thirty-Three Years Later	115
	Afterword to the First French Translation (1976)	181
	Translator's Note	191
	Notes	195
	Index	217