

Contents

Notes on contributors	iv
Preface and acknowledgements	ix
one Sociology and survivor research: an introduction	1
Angela Sweeney
two Mental health service users' experiences and epistemological fallacy	11
Hugh Middleton
three Doing good carer-led research: reflecting on 'Past Caring' methodology	25
Wendy Rickard and Rachel Purtell
four Theorising service user involvement from a researcher perspective	39
Katherine C. Pollard and David Evans
five How does who we are shape the knowledge we produce? Doing collaborative research about personality disorders	53
Steve Gillard, Kati Turner and Marion Neffgen
six Where do service users' knowledges sit in relation to professional and academic understandings of knowledge?	69
Peter Beresford and Kathy Boxall
seven Recognition politics as a human rights perspective on service users' experiences of involvement in mental health services	87
Lydia Lewis
eight Theorising a social model of 'alcoholism': service users who misbehave	105
Patsy Staddon
nine "Hard to reach"? Racialised groups and mental health service user involvement	121
Jayasree Kalathil
ten Individual narratives and collective knowledge: capturing lesbian, gay and bisexual service user experiences	135
Sarah Carr
eleven Alternative futures for service user involvement in research	153
Hugh McLaughlin
twelve Brief reflections	171
Patsy Staddon
Appendix Details of the seminar series	175
Lydia Lewis
Index	181