

Contents

|   |    |
|---|----|
| Abbreviations   | ix |
| 1 "Gender ideology" in movement: IntroductionDavid Paternotte and Roman Kuhar  | 1  |
| "Gender ideology" as a discourse 4  |    |
| "Gender ideology" as a strategy 8   |    |
| "Gender ideology" as a national phenomenon 16   |    |
| References 17   |    |
| 2 "Gender ideology" in Austria: Coalitions around anempty signifierStefanie Mayer and Birgit Sauer                                     | 23 |
| The Austrian context and the emergence of the anti-genderdiscourse 24   |    |
| Actors of the "gender ideology" alliance 27   |    |
| Discursive analysis: What's the problem with "genderideology"? 29   |    |
| Conclusion 36   |    |
| References 38   |    |
| 3 "No prophet is accepted in his own country": Catholicanti-gender activism in BelgiumSarah Bracke, Wannes Dupont and David Paternotte | 41 |
| Marching for the family 42  |    |
| A strongly minorized movement in Flanders 44  |    |
| Francophone Belgium: Activists with a French touch 46   |    |

|   |  |     |
|---|--|-----|
|   | Why are they not influential? 48   |     |
|   | Conclusion 53  |     |
|   | References 56  |     |
| 4 | Embryo, teddy bear-centaur and the constitution: Mobilizations against “gender ideology” and sexual permissiveness in CroatiaAmir Hodžić and Aleksandar Štulhofer | 59  |
|   | Background 60  |     |
|   | A chronology of main activities and targets 62   |     |
|   | The defining characteristics of the movement 64  |     |
|   | Conclusion 70  |     |
|   | References 73  |     |
| 5 | Resisting “gender theory” in France: A fulcrum for religious action in a secular societyMichael Stambolis-Ruhstorfer and Josselin Tricou                          | 79  |
|   | Anti-gender mobilization in the 2010s 81   |     |
|   | Explaining the emergence of the anti-gender cause 82   |     |
|   | France’s “anti-gender” pipeline to the Vatican 84  |     |
|   | Translating the “anti-gender” cause for the 2010s: Reframing for a new context 85  |     |
|   | The religious, political and social backgrounds of activists: An organizing advantage with a communications liability 88   |     |
|   | Broadening the appeal of the anti-gender movement: Neutralizing the religious and social characteristics of the activists 89   |     |
|   | The effects of anti-gender mobilization on inter- and intra-religious political dynamics 91  |     |
|   | Conclusion 93  |     |
|   | References 95  |     |
| 6 | “Anti-genderismus”: German angst?Paula-Irene Villa  | 99  |
|   | General background: The situation in Germany 101   |     |
|   | Early articulations: Journalistic neoconservatism and lay Catholic/Christian voices 102  |     |
|   | The current situation: Anti-genderism as a missing link between heterogeneous constellations 108   |     |
|   | Conclusion 112   |     |
|   | References 114   |     |
| 7 | Anti-gender discourse in Hungary: A discourse without a movement?Eszter Kováts and Andrea Pető  | 117 |

|           |   |            |
|-----------|---|------------|
|           | The history of a discourse  | 118        |
|           | Why is there no movement? Discouraging factors  | 123        |
|           | Why we could expect the emergence of a movement   | 125        |
|           | Conclusion  | 127        |
|           | References  | 129        |
| 8  | Defending Catholic Ireland   | 133 |
|           | Mary McAuliffe and Sinéad Kennedy  |            |
|           | A Catholic nation for a Catholic people   | 134        |
|           | Abortion and Catholicism in Ireland   | 135        |
|           | The Irish Catholic Church and homosexuality   | 139        |
|           | The 2015 same-sex marriage campaign   | 140        |
|           | Conclusion  | 144        |
|           | References  | 147        |
| 9  | Italy as a lighthouse: Anti-gender protests between the“anthropological question” and national identity | 151 |
|           | Sara Garbagnoli  |            |
|           | From nothing to all: The emergency of gender in Italianpolitics   | 153        |
|           | Gender as a federating rallying cry with a make-up effect   | 154        |
|           | Protecting “our children” to defend the human and safeguardnational identity                                    | 160        |
|           | Italy as a fertile ground for “gender ideology”   | 165        |
|           | References  | 171        |
| 10 | “Worse than communism and Nazism put together”: War ongender in Poland                                  | 175 |
|           | Agnieszka Graff and Elżbieta Korolczuk   |            |
|           | Key actors and strategies in the Polish war on gender   | 176        |
|           | Main themes and developments  | 178        |
|           | “Anti-genderism” as an intellectual project   | 183        |
|           | Interpretations of anti-gender mobilization: Polishexceptionalism reconsidered                                  | 184        |
|           | Conclusion  | 188        |
|           | References  | 190        |
| 11 | Russia as the saviour of European civilization: Gender andthe geopolitics of traditional values         | 195 |
|           | Kevin Moss   |            |
|           | The Russian context   | 195        |
|           | “Gender ideology” discourse in Russia   | 199        |
|           | Academic homophobia: Moscow State University  | 200        |

|           |  |     |
|-----------|--|-----|
|           | The World Congress of Families   | 203 |
|           | Politicians, political networking and the Russian Orthodox Church                              | 206 |
|           | Conclusion   | 208 |
|           | References   | 209 |
| 12 | Changing gender several times a day: The anti-gender movement in Slovenia                      | 215 |
|           | Roman Kuhar   |     |
|           | A civil initiative of concerned citizens   | 216 |
|           | The anti-gender movement and the Catholic Church   | 218 |
|           | The interpretations and framings of "gender theory"  | 222 |
|           | The success of the anti-gender movement  | 223 |
|           | Conclusion   | 228 |
|           | References   | 230 |
| 13 | From the pulpit to the streets: Ultra-conservative religious positions against gender in Spain | 233 |
|           | Monica Cornejo and José Ignacio Pichardo Galán  |     |
|           | Religion, society and politics   | 234 |
|           | The emergence of the discourse on "gender ideology"  | 236 |
|           | Anti-gender actors and their strategies  | 236 |
|           | Explaining the low impact of high mobilization   | 243 |
|           | References   | 247 |
| 14 | The anti-gender movement in comparative perspective  | 253 |
|           | David Paternotte and Roman Kuhar  |     |
|           | Overview of the anti-gender movement in Europe   | 255 |
|           | An uneven development in Europe  | 265 |
|           | Europe in a global picture   | 269 |
|           | References   | 272 |
|           | Biographies  | 277 |
|           | Index  | 283 |