

CONTENTS

Acknowledgments xi

Note on Translation xiii

Introduction, Alasdair MacIntyre and Hans Fink xv

Introduction I

1. Concerning the attempt to give a definition in strictly human terms of the relationship to the other person which is contained within the religious proclamation of Jesus of Nazareth I
2. One presupposition of the view that—according to the proclamation of Jesus—it is in relationship to our neighbor that the relationship to God is determined 4
3. Methodological remarks 5

1. The Fact Which Is the Source of the Silent Demand 8

1. The trust which, on a basic understanding, belongs to human existence 8
2. The demand that grows out of the trust which in a basic and all-encompassing understanding belongs to our human life 17
3. The twofold function of conventional forms 19
4. The demand is unspoken. It is not expressed by the other person 20
5. Does demand encourage encroachment? 22

2. Mediation 29

1. The question of mediation illustrated by an analysis of the concept of love in the works of D. H. Lawrence 29
2. Objective and personal mediation 39

3. The Radical Character of the Demand and the Social Norms 44

1. The demand is radical 44
2. Mistaking the radical character for limitlessness 46

vi
Contents

---

3. The protection afforded by legal, moral, and conventional regulations 53
4. The radical demand is unspoken. It is not expressed in social norms 56
5. The guidance of the social norms 57
6. The inadequate guidance of the social norms 60
4. The Changing Character of the Social Norms 64
  1. Need, claim, and form 64
  2. Eros and ethos 67
  3. The changing character of the social norms illustrated by changes in the view taken of love 74
  4. The inner contradiction in our view of the relationship between the sexes 85
  5. The changing character of social norms illustrated by changes in views of power, wealth, and equality 89
  6. The changing character of social norms illustrated by the process of secularization 95
  7. Is our knowledge of their relativity a threat to the social norms? 100
5. Is There a Christian Ethics? 105
  1. Our relation to the radical demand is invisible 105
  2. Is there a Christian ethics? 108
6. Opposition to the One-sided Demand 115
  1. The protest in the name of reciprocity 115
  2. The understanding of life and the one-sided demand 116
  3. Controlling existence by way of theories 118
  4. The protest in the name of suffering and death 120
7. Is the Ethical Demand Destructive on Account of Its Radical Character? 123
  1. The two components of the ethical demand 123
  2. Is a claim for reciprocity characteristic of natural love in a way which sets it in opposition to the one-sided demand? 124
  3. The false assertion that loneliness is a curse 129
  4. The inadequacy of natural love in the relationships which it itself helped to create 131

vii
Contents

---

5. The destructive demand 136
6. The wickedness of human beings and the goodness of life 138
7. The difference between natural love and love of neighbor 142

8. Making Compromises with the Demand 143

1. Making compromises with the demand 143
2. The sharpened contradiction 146

9. The Ethical Decision 148

1. Decision and resolution 148
2. Failing camouflaged as a conflict of duties 151
3. Preoccupation with motives is paralyzing 154
4. The decision's hold upon us 155
5. The critical and the normal situation 158

10. Science and Ethics 164

1. The ultimate authority in the demand 164
2. Is it possible within the framework of a nonmetaphysical philosophy to speak of an unfulfillable demand? 167
3. The attitudes of the sciences to the assumptions of every demand 173
4. The morality of intellectualism and of responsibility 174
5. The conflict over the interpretation of determination 180
6. The interpretation of the scientific reduction 186

11. Poetry and Ethics 192

1. Poetic and ethical understanding of life 192

I 192

II 196

12. The Unfulfillability of the Demand and the Proclamation of Jesus 207

1. The authority with which Jesus spoke 207
2. The source of authority with which Jesus spoke 209
3. The difference between the attitudes to the mission and the proclamation of Jesus in his own time and ours 213
4. Trust and interpretation 215

viii
Contents

---

13. Polemical Epilogue	218
1. Settling accounts with Kierkegaard's Works of Love	218
I
An account of the leading ideas in Kierkegaard's Works of Love	218
Kierkegaard's definition of passionate love in Works of Love	218
Kierkegaard's definition of love of one's neighbor in Works of Love	220
II
Settling accounts with Kierkegaard's Works of Love	224
2. Kierkegaard's unwillingness to distinguish between the essence of natural love and its selfish form	234
3. The problem of Pietism in Kierkegaard	236
4. Olesen Larsen ignores the empirical fact which is the source of the demand	240
5. The philosophy and theology influenced by Kierkegaard ignore the understanding of life contained in the ethical demand	246
6. Cognition and existence	252
I
	252
II
	254
III
	262
Appendix
Ethics and Ontology	265
Teleological, Deontological, and Ontological Ethics	265
I
Teleological ethics, based on psychological desires and logical linguistics	266
The teleological conception reduces the world to conditions of following our ends	270
Ethics and the world view of art	270
The ethical aspect is an opposing light	272
An exaggeration of the role that reflection plays for moral rules	273
The singularity of an ethical situation and the universality of the moral rule	280

ix
Contents

---

The argument between ontological and teleological ethics, illustrated by the relation between three factors: an interpretation of natural language, subjective world view, and scientific knowledge 282

II

Does duty mean too little in teleological ethics and too much in deontological ethics? 288

Kierkegaard's deontological ethics 290

Knowledge and existence 290

Command or demand 291

Positivism and existentialism 292

Bibliography 295

Index 299

Hana Fink
Alain MacIntyre