CONTENTS

About the author xii

PART 1 RESEARCH PRINCIPLES: MOTIVATION, CAUSATION, ETHICS AND GENERALIZABILITY 1

INTRODUCTION: COMMUNICATING MEDIA RESEARCH 3

On media education and media research 3
Taking media research to the media 5
Case study: Rampage killings and changing media landscapes 6
The anatomy of a research question 7
Putting theory and research together: The research cycle 8

1 MAKING MEDIA MATTER 11

Objective: Why is media research 'political'? 11
Why media entertainment is a serious business 12
The many faces of media influence 15
Media influence: Defining critical perspectives 16
Case study: Complex media effects in action: Framing crime and punishment 19
Conclusion: Four aspects of a research question: Experience, causation, ethics and generalizability 21
Chapter summary 22

2 MAKING MEDIA MATTER TO YOU 23

Objective: Using experience to formulate research questions 23
Case study: Cyber bullying and media education 24
Experiences of cyber bullying 27
Experience, research and action 33
Conclusion: Turning experience into research questions 37
Chapter summary 38

3 ON CAUSATION: HOW DO MEDIA 'DO' THINGS? 39

Objective: Using technology to explain the cultural nature of media-related historical change 39

Case study: Do media technologies change the world? Wikileaks and 'whistleblowing' 41
Understanding technology, industry and social change using Wikileaks 43
Conclusion: Using technology to develop an historical and cultural model of media change 52
Chapter summary 54

4 PRACTISING ETHICS IN MEDIA RESEARCH 55

Objective: Appreciating the social benefit of research 55
Media and ethics: Key tensions between research ethics and the practice of media research 56
Case study: Ethical challenges in researching live events 57
Who is media research for? 62
From visibility and privacy to invisibility and justice 65
Conclusion: Ethics and the social value of research 69
Chapter summary 70

5 WHAT IS 'GENERALIZABILITY' IN MEDIA RESEARCH? 71

Objective: Defining 'generalizability' in a world of diverse media influences 71
Case study: Using the topics of gaming and rampage murders to outline general theories of media influence 72
Mediatization and a general theory of media effects 82
Conclusion 86
Chapter summary 87

PART 2 UNDERSTANDING MEDIA RESEARCH: FRAMING GENERAL QUESTIONS 89

6 RESEARCHING MEDIA REALITY 91

Objective: Describing how media representations define social problems 92
Case study: How the media 'created' mental illness 93
Key paradigm: The Cultural Indicators Project 97
Key insight: Mental illness and industrialization storytelling 102
Significance: Understanding representation as a social and industrial process 105
Chapter summary 106

7 RESEARCHING MEDIA'S ROLE IN SOCIAL LIFE 108

Objective: Understanding how media users make reality 109
Case study: Social media mourning 110
Key paradigm: Media rituals 113

Key insight: People connect to the social through media habits 119
Significance: Identifying media habits that make political consciousness 123
Chapter summary 124

8 RESEARCHING THE SYNTHESIS OF MEDIA AND INTERPERSONAL COMMUNICATION 125

Objective: Using celebrity to demonstrate the integration of media and interpersonal communication 126
Case study: Celebrity and health communication 127
Key paradigm: The coordinated management of meaning: Celebrity disclosure as speech action 133
Key insight: Basing research on key moments in media communication 136
Significance: Identifying media moments that start social conversations 137
Chapter summary 140

PART 3 DOING MEDIA RESEARCH: PEOPLE, MARKETS, TEXTS, EVENTS, USERS, AUDIENCES, POLICY 141

9 RESEARCHING MEDIA PEOPLE: JOURNALISM, ORAL HISTORY AND ARCHIVES 143

Objective: Conceiving the influence of creative individuals in media culture 144
Case study: War reporting and war correspondents in 'post truth' society 145
Journalism studies: Beyond conspiracy theory 147
Key paradigm: Historical war journalism studies 149
Key method: Archival research 153
Significance: Beyond conspiracy: Understanding media creatives as people who negotiate organizational, historical and political pressure 156
Chapter summary 158

10 RESEARCHING MEDIA MARKETS: A CULTURAL INDUSTRIES VIEW ON PORNOGRAPHY 159

Objective: Understanding how markets affect creativity, content and inclusion 160
Case study: Pornography 161
Key paradigm: Cultural industries, markets and culture 166
Key method: Field research 170
Significance: Observing labour and consumption in small markets offers useful insights about power in global media industries 174
Chapter summary 175

11 RESEARCHING MEDIA CONTENT: GAMES, TEXTS AND DISCOURSE 176

Objective: Using an expanded notion of 'content' to address the social life of media phenomena 177
Case study: Video gaming: Old problems, new problems 178
Key paradigm: War games and memory 182
Key method: Discourse analysis of paratexts 186
Significance: 'Textual analysis' addresses the social life of media phenomena, not the meaning of a text 192
Chapter summary 193

12 RESEARCHING MEDIA EVENTS 194

Objective: Developing observational methods for analysing media in action 195
Case study: Ronda Rousey: Space, travel and the media sport star 196
Key paradigm: Participant observation 199
Key method: Observing media events 204
Significance: Media events dramatize global media processes right before our eyes 208
Chapter summary 210

13 BIG DATA: HOW CAN WE USE IT? 211

Objective: Understanding how to use social media data in a critical fashion 212
Case study: Big Data, Twitter and the 2015–2016 US Presidential election 213
Key paradigm: Psephology 218
Key method: Capturing and analysing tweets 220
Significance: Big Data alerts us to the tensions between different kinds of knowledge 224
Chapter summary 226

14 RESEARCHING MEDIA POLICY 227

Objective: Defining how media research informs policy understanding 228
Case study: Alcohol advertising and marketing 229
Key paradigm: Citizen-centred policy studies 233
Key method: QDA analysis of complaints archives 235
Significance: Media policy creates citizens 238
Chapter summary 240

15 RESEARCHING AUDIENCES 241

Objective: Narrating media influence with the stories that audiences tell 242
Case study: Media, the Royal Family and the British public 243
Key paradigm: Reception studies 246
Key method: Using encoding/decoding to make sense of audience diaries 251
Significance: Audiences as history makers 258
Chapter summary 258

CONCLUSION: HISTORICIZING MEDIA RESEARCH – AND THE PEOPLE WHO DO IT 259

The politicization and personalization of media research 259
Depersonalizing personalized media studies 263

References 269
Index 296