WH Newson Holding Ltd & others v IMI Plc: new developments in the jurisdiction of the UK Competition Appeal Tribunal 395

The High Court decision in WH Newson Holding Ltd & others v IMI Plc & others marks a change in approach to follow-on damages claims before the UK Competition Appeal Tribunal (CAT). This article explores the potential impact of the judgment on the way such claims are framed, particularly in the light of proposed reforms of the CAT's jurisdiction.

The role of competition analysis under article 107 paragraph 1 TFEU: the emergence of a "market analysis" assessment within the selectivity criterion? 400

Material selectivity under art.107 TFEU has been very controversial in recent case law. The NOx and the British Aggregates renvoi cases show that the Court has endorsed a "market analysis" assessment to determine if a regulatory measure is selective. These judgments raise the issue on the role of competition analysis within the criterion of material selectivity.

Simplified Procedures for Multiple Leniency Applications Across Europe 407

The article summarises the changes introduced by the European Competition Network in the new version of its Model Leniency Programme ("MLP"). Although the MLP falls short of introducing a one-stop-shop leniency program at EU level, it introduces a set of common standards for multiple leniency applications, in an endeavour to overcome any reluctance to apply for leniency resulting from discrepancies between the different leniency regimes in the European Union.

Counterfactual Analysis in Predation Cases 410

Recent contributions on predatory pricing discuss the validity of counterfactual tests. This paper suggests that a counterfactual test could be a useful tool in predation cases by establishing a causal link between the profitability of the conduct and the foreclosure effect. It should be asked whether the price setting is not profitable but for the foreclosure of competitors.

State Aids Scrutiny in the Electronic Media Sector: the position between the EU and Pakistan compared 429

The Government of Pakistan injects financial support to the broadcasting public sector. After the development of the private sector in 2002, the commercial channels developed competition within the country. Now, public and private sectors regulate separately in Pakistan. This article critically analyses the comparative state aids between the European Union and Pakistan, particularly in the context of public and private broadcasting.

Alternative Dispute Resolution in Antitrust Cases? On the Role of Mediation in US Antitrust and EU and German Competition Law 434

In the United States, mediation has proven to be a powerful tool in antitrust proceedings. By contrast, it plays only (if any) a minor role in EU and German competition law. This article seeks to give an explanation for this finding and analyses the potential of mediation for competition law enforcement at the EU level and in Germany.
