The UK Competition and Markets Authority should not cap energy retail prices 411

This article provides an overview of the UK Competition and Markets Authority's (CMA) provisional findings from its energy market investigation. It argues that the CMA should not pursue two of its more far-reaching remedy proposals: an Ofgem price comparison service; and a safeguard regulated tariff for disengaged customers.

DR JURGITA MALINAUSKAITE

Payment Systems Regulator—a new body to improve competition in the UK payments sector 415

This article discusses the establishment of a new Payment Systems Regulator (PSR) in the UK to promote effective competition in the markets for payment systems. It explores the PSR's functions and its concurrent powers with the Competition and Markets Authority (CMA), and finally, the extent to which this newly formed body is well equipped to tackle competition cases.

Competition Law Compliance: the CMA 2015 study, compliance rationales and the need for increased compliance professionalism and education 423

Competition law, its implications for the economy, and its consequences for industry are particularly topical and controversial. This article will outline the potential sanctions and remedial consequences of an infringement of competition law and then focus on the outcomes of a recent study of competition law compliance by UK businesses commissioned by the Competition and Markets Authority. The article reflects on compliance research more generally and what can or should be done to further facilitate, cajole and encourage competition law compliance, notably through enhanced business-oriented compliance education.

Cartel Damage Claims (CDC) Hydrogen Peroxide SA v Akzo Nobel NV and Others: A summary and critique of the judgment of the European Court of Justice of May 21, 2015 430

In civil cartel damage claims, the choice of forum is arguably the single most important decision for a claimant. In its recent judgment, the European Court of Justice (ECJ) addressed a number of key issues in relation to international jurisdiction pertaining to the anchor defendant rules, tortious liability and arbitration clauses. However, it missed the opportunity to clarify questions of detail in this respect which typically arise in complex cartel damage cases.

Apple and Spotify, a competition law song? 436

A company dominant in internet music sales can leverage this market power to enter in the distinct but related music streaming market, paying more than its competitors for music rights and selling the product for less to consumers. This article considers how that can amount to an anti-competitive behaviour because of the company's dominance.

The rise of commitments and remedies: rethinking enforcement risk in Singapore merger control 439

Through a succession of merger decisions in 2014/2015, the Competition Commission of Singapore demonstrated an aggressive stance towards merger control, and in requiring local commitments and remedies. This article discusses the rethinking of enforcement risks in Singapore, and how merger parties and their advisors should navigate the new regime.

MOHAMED EL FAR

Successful private damages case in Egypt: Case 5/2013 Hewala Factory v Egyptian Co for Float Glass Judgment April 19, 2015 3rd Circuit, Civil Economic Appeals Mansoura Egypt 448

In an important private damages decision under the Egyptian Competition Law, the court has granted the plaintiff damages for the harm sustained because of anti-competitive practices committed by a defendant. The court has also clarified numerous legal points such as limitation periods, refusal to supply and the relation between civil actions and criminal actions. This case note addresses the main facts and findings, and highlights the main observations and comments.
