

Tables and Figures	xiii
Preface to the Classic Paperback	xvii
Preface	xxi
The Author	xxix
1. Growth of the Learning Society	1
Demographic Change • Social Change • Technological Change
2. Issues in Recruiting Adult Learners	32
“Recruitment” • “Mandated” Continuing Education • Equal Opportunity • Future Directions

3.	Who Participates in Adult Learning	50
	Participants in Organized Learning Activities
	• Participants in Self-Directed Learning
	• Participants in Adult Learning for Academic Credit • Summary and Commentary
4.	Why Adults Participate—and Why Not	81
	Research on Motivation • Research on Barriers to Learning
5.	Toward a Model of Adult Motivation for Learning	109
	Field-Force Analysis: Harry L. Miller
	• Expectancy-Valence Paradigm: Kjell Rubenson
	• A Congruence Model: Roger Boshier
	• Anticipated Benefits: Allen Tough • Common Elements in Existing Theories • Chain-of-Response (COR) Model
6.	Implications for Increasing Participation	132
	Raising Self-Confidence Levels • Building Positive Attitudes Toward Education • Meeting Goals and Expectations of Learners • Responding to Life Transitions • Creating Opportunities and Removing Barriers • Providing Accurate Information • Conclusion
7.	Patterns of Adult Learning and Development	152
	Learning Processes • Developmental Research
8.	How and What Adults Learn—and Want to Learn	186
	Self-Directed Learning • State and National Surveys

9. Facilitating Learning 220

Andragogy as Theory • Humanistic Theories
• Developmental Theories • Behaviorism
• Relevance of Existing Learning Theories
• Characteristics of Adults as Learners (CAL):
A Conceptual Framework • Conclusion

Appendices 253

Appendix A: Lifelong Learning: Comments
and Definitions 255

Appendix B: Characteristics of Lifelong Education 261

References 265

Index 289