

Contents

Acknowledgements	xi
1. Introduction: The Normativity of Rationality	1
1.1 The Normative Question about Rationality	2
1.2 Normativity, Reasons, and 'Ought'	5
1.3 Structural Irrationality	14
1.4 Structural Requirements of Rationality	17
1.5 A Range of Views	20
1.6 Prospects	22
2. Rationality, Reasons, and Criticism	24
2.1 The Criticism Argument	24
2.2 The Criticizability Claim	26
2.3 Criticizability and the Subjective 'Ought'	31
2.4 Criticizability and Well-Functioning	33
2.5 Criticizability and Virtue	37
2.6 Rationality and Criticism	38
2.7 The Obscurity of Non-Normative Requirements of Rationality	42
2.8 Summary and Prospects	44
3. Structural Requirements of Rationality	45
3.1 Wide- or Narrow-Scope Requirements?	45
3.2 Proposition- or Response-Requirements?	51
3.3 Conditional or Unconditional Requirements?	58
3.4 Synchronic or Diachronic Requirements?	62
3.5 State- or Process-Requirements?	70
3.6 Summary	80
4. Bootstrapping and Other Detachment Problems	81
4.1 The Bootstrapping Problem	81
4.2 The Reasons Strategy	83
4.3 The Subjective 'Ought' Strategy	86
4.4 The Wide-Scope Strategy	88
4.5 Wide-Scope and Normative Detachment	89
4.6 Wide-Scope and Liberal Transmission	92
4.7 Wide-Scope and Necessary Means Transmission	99
4.8 Summary	102
5. The Why-Be-Rational Challenge	103
5.1 Are There Derivative Reasons to Be Rational?	103
5.2 Are Rational Requirements Themselves Reasons?	106
5.3 Buck-Passing and the Normative Question	108
5.4 Are There Epistemic Reasons to Be Theoretically Rational?	111
5.5 The Transparency Account	114
5.6 The Apparent Reasons Account	119
5.7 Summary	124

6. The Myth of Structural Rationality	126
6.1 Narrow-Scope Problem (i): Bootstrapping	126
6.2 Narrow-Scope Problem (ii): Inconsistency	130
6.3 Narrow-Scope Problem (iii): Undermining	133
6.4 Wide-Scope Problem (i): Asymmetry	138
6.5 Asymmetry and the Rational Process Constraint	144
6.6 Wide-Scope Problem (ii): Guidance	148
6.7 The Myth of Structural Requirements of Rationality	156
7. Rationality as Responding Correctly to Reasons	159
7.1 Taking Stock: Structural Rationality and Normative Reasons	159
7.2 A Fresh Start: Rationality as Responding to Reasons	160
7.3 Response Rationality	164
7.4 The Supervenience Argument	166
7.5 The Backup View	171
7.6 Evidence, Practical Reasons, and Goodness	174
7.7 Theoretical Rationality, Uniqueness, and Justificational Fecundity	180
7.8 Available Reasons and Evidence for 'Ought'-Propositions	185
7.9 Practical Rationality and Reasons for Actions and Intentions	190
7.10 Summary and Prospects	194
8. An Evidence-Relative Account of Reasons	195
8.1 Pure Objectivism vs. Perspectivism	195
8.2 The Evidence-Relative View	198
8.3 Against Pure Objectivism	201
8.4 The Misguidance Argument	206
8.5 The Better Information Problem	211
8.6 Synchronic and Diachronic Reasons	215
8.7 The General Evidence Constraint	219
8.8 Choice-Dependence	223
8.9 Summary and Concluding Remarks	227
9. Explaining Structural Irrationality	231
9.1 Explaining Structural Irrationality: The General Idea	231
9.2 Irrationality, Response Failures, and Incoherence	235
9.3 Structural vs. Non-Structural Explanations of Irrationality	239
9.4 Two Problems for the Non-Structural Explanation	241
9.5 Explaining Akrasia	246
9.6 Explaining Doxastic Akrasia	248
9.7 Explaining Modus Ponens Irrationality	254
10. Explaining Instrumental Irrationality	263
10.1 The Underdetermination Problem	263
10.2 Balance-Tipping Views	268
10.3 Against Balance-Tipping	274
10.4 Normativism and Cognitivism	276
10.5 A Reason to Decide	280
10.6 Exceptions	285
10.7 Specifying and Generalizing the Account	288

10.8 Objections	291
10.9 Instrumental Rationality as a System of Categorical Imperatives	294
Conclusion	295
Bibliography	297
Index	311