

■ TABLE OF CONTENTS

LIST OF FIGURES	x
1 Introduction	1
1.1 What is new? The affordance of practice theories	1
1.2 There is no such a thing as a unified practice theory	8
1.3 Practice theories and the study of work and organization	11
1.3.1 Returning to practice: a weak and strong programme?	12
1.4 The content and structure of the book	14
1.5 The rolling case study	16
1.5.1 What is telemedicine?	17
1.5.2 What is chronic heart failure?	18
1.5.3 Telemonitoring at Garibaldi	18
1.6 Words of thanks	19
2 Praxis and Practice Theory: A Brief Historical Overview	23
2.1 The legacy of Greek classical thought and the demotion of practice in the Western tradition	23
2.1.1 Plato's intellectualist legacy	24
2.1.2 Aristotle on praxis	25
2.2 The demotion of practice in the Western tradition	28
2.3 The rediscovery of practice: Marx, Heidegger, and Wittgenstein	29
2.3.1 Marx	29
2.3.2 Nietzsche, Heidegger, and the primacy of practice in the phenomenological tradition	33
2.3.3 Wittgenstein: intelligibility as practice	37
2.3.4 The return of practice in contemporary social thought	40
3 Praxeology and the Work of Giddens and Bourdieu	44
3.1 Giddens: practice as the basic domain of study of the social sciences	44
3.1.1 Giddens' view of practice	46
3.1.2 Giddens at work	49
3.2 Bourdieu's praxeology: an overview	53
3.2.1 On habitus	55
3.2.2 How habitus produces practice	59
3.2.3 Theorizing practice	61
3.2.4 Bourdieu's praxeology and the study of work and organization	66
Rolling case study: Telemedicine and the nursing habitus	70

4 Practice as Tradition and Community	77
4.1 Practice, tradition, and learning	78
4.2 Practice and community	86
4.3 Withdrawing the phrase 'community of practice'?	92
Rolling case study: Becoming part of the practice of telemedicine	96
5 Practice as Activity	103
5.1 The Marxian roots of cultural historical activity theory	104
5.2 The central tenets of cultural and historical activity theory	105
5.2.1 The central role of mediation	106
5.2.2 The activity system as the basic unit of analysis	108
5.2.3 There is no such a thing as an object-less activity	111
5.2.4 The conflictual and expanding nature of activity systems	113
5.2.5 The interventionist nature of CHAT	115
5.3 The weaknesses of a strong theory	117
Rolling case study: Telemedicine as an activity system	123
6 Practice as Accomplishment	134
6.1 Ethno-methodology's view of everyday activity	135
6.1.1 Accountability	135
6.1.2 Reflexivity	137
6.1.3 Indexicality	138
6.1.4 Membership	139
6.2 The implication of ethno-methodology for the study of (work) practices	140
6.3 The new generation of EM-oriented studies of work and organization	145
6.4 An unfinished task	150
Rolling case study: Accomplishing monitoring	153
7 Practice as the House of the Social: Contemporary Developments of the Heideggerian and Wittgensteinian Traditions	162
7.1 Why people do what they do?	163
7.2 Practices and their organization	164
7.3 Practices and materials	168
7.4 How practices constitute action, sociality, the world, and themselves	171
7.5 Some further theoretical implications	175
7.6 Empirical and methodological consequences: a 'site' still under construction?	178
Rolling case study: Telemonitoring as a practice-order bundle	182

8 Discourse and Practice	189
8.1 Conversation analysis: discourse as talk in interaction	191
8.1.1 The basic assumptions of CA and their implications for the understanding of practice	191
8.2 Practice as discourse: Foucault and the Foucauldian tradition	195
8.3 Critical discourse analysis	198
8.4 Mediated discourse analysis	202
8.4.1 The five pillars of mediated discourse analysis	203
8.4.2 Nexus analysis	205
Rolling case study: Telemonitoring: a conversation analysis view	208
 9 Bringing it all Together: A Toolkit to Study and Represent Practice at Work	 213
9.1 The need for a toolkit approach	214
9.2 A package of theories and methods	216
9.2.1 The theory-method package: an overview	219
9.2.2 Zooming in on practice: in the beginning was the deed	219
9.2.3 Representing practice through foregrounding the active role of tools, materials, and the body	223
9.2.4 Representing practice through zooming in on its oriented and concerned nature	224
9.2.5 Appreciating practice as bounded creativity	225
9.2.6 Representing practice by focusing on legitimacy and learning	226
9.3 Zooming out by trailing practices and their connections	228
9.3.1 A palette for zooming out	230
9.3.2 How practice and their associations can act at a distance	235
9.3.3 How did we get here?	236
9.3.4 When to stop the zooming in and out?	237
9.4 The benefits and perils of the zooming metaphor	238
9.5 Where next	240
 BIBLIOGRAPHY	 243
INDEX	261