

Contents

Acknowledgments

ix

1 Introduction

The zainichi population today 3

Identity, discourse and power 5

Identity politics 8

Agency and resistance 10

Presenting the situation 11

2 Zainichi activism and the Japanese state

14

Introduction 14

Homogeneous folk or multi-national Empire 15

From annexation to liberation 16

From liberation to realization 24

North and South in Japan 30

We do not employ 'foreigners' 33

3 The 'Third Way'

37

Demographic change 38

Homeland allegiance and the Korean community 42

The Third Way: 'zainichi' identity 44

Power and politics 46

Debate 48

Minzoku and belonging 51

Limitations 54

Hybridity and naturalization 55

Negotiating hybridity 56

Conclusion 58

4 Citizenship

60

Introduction 60

A change in activism 63

Solidarity and belonging 65

The Japanese Constitution and the nationality clause 68

The Japanese state and assimilation 71

Fingerprinting and the Alien Registration Law 73

Enfranchisement 75

Public service employment 78

Gender rights 81

Conclusion 81

5 Dealing with the past

84

Introduction 84

Postcoloniality 85

Interrogating history 87

Postcolonial studies 88

Korea under the colonial gaze 90

Japanese orientalism 93

Ideologies 96

Emperor, subject and state 98

Beyond national identities 102

Other theoretical paradigms 104

Gendering postcoloniality 105

Adding to debate 106

The zainichi family 107

The public space 110

Feminism and Korean-Japanese women 111

Conclusion 113

6 The Fourth Choice

115

Introduction 115

Migration 116

Discourses of assimilation 122

Monoculturalism and assimilation 128

The Fourth Choice: Korean-Japanese identity and beyond 130

The complexity of multicultural coexistence 135

Conclusion 138

7 Afterword	140
Acknowledgments
Glossary	145
Notes	148
References	161
Index	177

There are many whom I would like to acknowledge for their help in assisting me in completing this book. First, I would like to express my deepest appreciation to Vera Mackie. Vera's patient guidance, support and encouragement, as well as her readiness and willingness to share the extensive range and depth of her knowledge about Japan, its history and language have been crucial to the successful completion of this research from its initial stages as a doctoral thesis proposal through to its completion as this book.

I am also indebted to many universities and organizations that have provided assistance and financial support. They include Central Queensland University for assistance when I was a staff member in the early stages of this research; Curtin University of Technology and the Office of Research and Development for their support and timely financial assistance in the form of an Australian Postgraduate Award (APA) when residing in beautiful Perth and support throughout my doctoral candidature; and the University of South Australia for research funds at various times and an easier teaching load at crucial junctures in this project. Also, I extend my gratitude to Waseda University and the Japan Society for the Promotion of Science for support as a postdoctoral fellow in Tokyo during the final stages of completing this manuscript. I have also received incredible support from many devoted individuals from many library and administrative units, such as the Office of Graduate Studies in the Division of Humanities at the Curtin University of Technology, Shinozaki Mayumi and the staff at Australian National University Library, Curtin University of Technology Library, Barr Smith Library Adelaide, University of South Australia Libraries, the National Library of Australia, the Diet Library in Tokyo and Waseda University Libraries.

There are also many colleagues and friends in Japan and Australia who have provided me with invaluable knowledge, assistance, encouragement and guidance. It is impossible to mention everyone, but in particular I would like to thank Sugimoto Yoshio and Michael Weiner for comments on this research as examiners of my thesis; my friend and colleague for many years Kawakami Eiko, who has always provided valuable advice, help and friendship; and