
Contents

Preface and Acknowledgements	xiii
Abbreviations	xv
<hr/>
1. Introduction	1
1.1 Aims and assumptions	1
1.2 Method	7
1.3 The one-to-one inflexional pattern and deviations from it	12
1.4 Phonologically conditioned allomorphy and 'abstractness'	18
Notes	21
2. The Status of Inflexional Paradigms	24
2.1 Paradigms and allomorphy	24
2.2 Recent views of the paradigm	26
2.3 Prodigality and parsimony in inflexion	28
2.3.1 Are inflexions distributed independently?	32
2.3.2 The nonexistence of 'syntactic parsimony'	35
Notes	40
3. The Paradigm Economy Principle	42
3.1 A first formulation	42
3.1.1 Some Hungarian, Zulu and Dyirbal evidence	42
3.1.2 Definitions	47
3.1.3 Consequences	52
3.2 Revisions and refinements	56
3.2.1 Prima facie counterevidence to the Paradigm Economy Principle	56
3.2.2 The relevance of lexically determined morphosyntax and morphosemantics	59
3.2.3 Macroparadigm uniqueness	70
3.2.4 Slabs and paradigm mixture	77
Notes	83

4.	Homonymy Within Paradigms	87
4.1	Introduction: approaches to inflexional homonymy	87
4.2	A general restriction on systematic homonymy	90
4.2.1	The structure of the argument	90
4.2.2	Systematic versus accidental homonymy	93
4.2.3	The morphosyntactic status of systematic homonymy	102
4.2.4	The data of the Appendix: a first observation	107
4.2.5	A possible function for systematic homonymy	109
4.2.6	Syncretism, take-over and the Systematic Homonymy Claim	114
4.2.7	Consequences of the Systematic Homonymy Claim for language change	124
4.2.8	The reliability of the Appendix	127
4.3	Some individual homonymies	128
4.3.1	Homonymy losses in Italian and Georgian	128
4.3.2	An Arabic Case-homonymy and its implications	132
4.3.3	Nominative–Accusative Neuter homonymies in Indo-European	137
	Notes	138
	Appendix to Chapter 4: A selection of inflexional homonymies	141
	Comments on the Appendix	144
5.	Syntagmatic Constraints on Allomorphy	147
5.1	Inward and outward sensitivity	147
5.1.1	Identifying pure sensitivity	147
5.1.2	Pure inward sensitivity	152
5.1.3	Peripherality and homonymy	162
5.1.4	Outward sensitivity	165
5.1.5	Zero realisations and morphosyntactic zeros	169
5.1.6	A problem: inconstancy of sequence in realisation	175

5.1.7	A second problem: phonological sensitivity outwards	179
5.1.8	The Peripherality Constraint and Deviation III	188
5.2	Peripherality and other constraints on allomorphy	195
5.2.1	Adjacency	195
5.2.2	The Elsewhere Condition	198
5.2.3	The Mirror Principle	201
	Notes	203
6.	Two Questions Concerning Stem Allomorphy	207
6.1	Introduction: types of stem	207
6.2	Stem allomorphy and the Peripherality Constraint	210
6.3	Stem allomorphy and the Paradigm Economy Principle	221
	Notes	233
7.	A Case Study: Paradigm Economy in German Nouns	234
7.1	The facts and the problems	234
7.2	German nominal macroparadigms	237
7.3	The weak declension-types	241
	Notes	250
	Appendix to Chapter 7: Inflexional vacillation among German nouns of declension-type XIII (Name)	251
8.	Next Steps	252
	Note	257

Bibliography	258
Indexes	266