

Contents

List of Illustrations	vii
Acknowledgments	x
Introduction. Adaptation as Reception: How Film Historians Can Contribute to the Literature to Film Debates	1
Part I. Post-Cold War Readings of the Receptions of Blockbuster Adaptations in Cold War West Germany 1950–1963	19
Chapter 1. “Eine Revolution des Films”: The Third Man , The Cold War, and Alternatives to Nationalism and Coca-Colonization in Europe	28
Chapter 2. The Bridge on the River Kwai Revisited: Combat Cinema, American Culture, and the German Past	54
Chapter 3. “Josef K. von 1963”: Orson Welles’s Americanized Version of The Trial and the Changing Functions of the Kafkaesque in Postwar West Germany	93
Part II. Postfeminist Relations between Classic Texts and Hollywood Film Adaptations in the U.S. in the 1990s	117
Chapter 4. Jane-Mania: The Jane Austen Film Boom in the 1990s	123
Chapter 5. Thelma and Sense and Louise and Sensibility: Challenging Dichotomies in Women’s History through Film and Literature	148
Chapter 6. Jamesian Proportions: The Henry James Film Boom in the 1990s	164

Conclusion. A Case for the Case Study: The Future of Adaptation Studies as a Branch of Transnational Film History	192
Appendix 1. Mediating Apparent and Latent Content (Tables 1 & 2)	202
Appendix 2. Model of Adaptation as a Process of Reception	204
Filmography	205
Bibliography	206
Archival Collections Consulted	206
Magazine/Film Review Collections Consulted	206
Primary Literary Works	206
Selected Secondary Works	207
Index	219