

CONTENTS

List of figures	vii
List of tables	viii
Preface	ix
Acknowledgements	x
Introduction	xi
1 What is reflective practice?	1
Introduction • Definitions • Why professionals need to reflect critically
• Preventing stagnation • Developing professional knowledge, skills and attitudes
• From unconscious incompetence to unconscious competence • The four theoretical foundations of critical reflection • Tacit knowledge • From technical rationality to reflection-in-action (Schön) • Making time to reflect
• A reflective space • The benefits of investing time in reflection • Conclusion
2 Becoming more self-aware	15
Introduction • The metaphorical mirror • How do I learn best? • Honey and Mumford's learning styles • Strengths and allowable weaknesses • Developing the Reflector style • SWOT/B and SWAIN analysis • Motivation • Transactional Analysis drivers • Conclusion
3 The role of writing in reflection	31
Introduction • Why writing? • What is reflective writing?
• How to start writing reflectively • A structure for reflective writing
• Using a reflective diary or journal to aid professional growth • Is it all about writing? • Conclusion
4 Experiential learning	42
Introduction • What do we mean by learning from experience?
• The ERA cycle • Kolb's experiential learning cycle • Reflection-on-action
• Driscoll's 'What?' model • Learning as transformation • Do we always learn from experience? • Conclusion
5 Learning from positives and negatives: critical incidents	57
Introduction • What is a critical incident? • The problematic experience
• Learning from positive experiences • Conclusion

6	Engaging with emotions	65
	Introduction • What are emotions? • Objectivity and subjectivity • Why is it important to consider our emotions in relation to professional practice? • The Almond Effect and the closing of the trapdoor • Why do we need to process our feelings? • Gibbs' reflective cycle • The work of Boud, Keogh and Walker • How can we process our feelings effectively? • Conclusion
7	Bringing assumptions to the surface	79
	Introduction • What are assumptions and how do they come about? • Why professionals need to understand the assumptions they may be making • How assumptions can be questioned • Argyris' Ladder of Inference • Double loop learning (Argyris and Schön) • Mezirow's seven levels of reflectivity that lead to 'perspective transformation' • A model for challenging limiting assumptions • Conclusion
8	The role of feedback in professional development	93
	Introduction • The need for feedback in professional development • The role of critical friendship • The role of supervision • Johari Window • Eraut on feedback • Some final words about mentoring • Conclusion
9	Reflecting in groups	105
	Introduction • What is a group? • Types of group • The benefits of reflecting in groups • Facilitating effective groups • A model for effective group participation • Dangers and downsides • Sample exercises • Conclusion
10	Managing change	117
	Introduction • Why having an understanding of change is important for professional practitioners • Constant change and its effects • Adams, Hayes and Hopson's model • Bridges • The work of Kurt Lewin • Readiness for change • Strategies for managing change • Back to assumptions • Conclusion
11	Critically reflective practice as a way of being	129
	Introduction • Critically reflective practice and reflexivity • Being open to change • The work of Johns • Brookfield's lenses • Managing stress • Mindfulness • 'Sharpening the saw' • Conclusion
12	Review and looking forward	144
	Introduction • Review and the Integrated Reflective Cycle • Senge's concept of personal mastery • Some final reflections • Conclusion
	Index	150