

Contents

Foreword	xi
Preface and acknowledgements	xiii
List of abbreviations	xv
1 Introduction	1
The impasse of contemporary climate politics	1
Bringing society and politics back into climate change	2
Bringing labour back into climate change	4
Climate change and the pertinence of employment relations	7
Organisation	8
Notes	12
References	13
2 Climate politics and the potential for climate solidarity	16
Introduction	16
Climate politics: between capitals, states and classes	16
Towards a Marxist political economy of climate change	24
Workers and climate change: between market, society and class	30
Trade unions in employment relations	33
Trade unions as climate actors	40
Conclusion	47
Notes	48
References	49
3 Trade unions, climate and employment in a neoliberal world	57
Introduction	57
Unions, climate and green jobs	59
Just transition	68
Class, climate and work	79

Conclusion 86

Notes 87

References 87

4 Trade unions and climate politics in the UK

94

Introduction 94

Union climate policy and ecological modernisation 95

Unions and neoliberal climate policy 106

Unions, climate and working-class politics 113

Conclusion 118

Notes 119

References 120

5 Workplace climate representation: prisoners of neoliberalism or swords of climate justice?

126

Introduction 126

Trade union climate representation 126

Green reps and ecological modernisation 136

Union environmental representatives: a force for climate action? 143

Conclusion 150

Notes 151

References 152

6 The Vestas occupation and climate politics

155

Introduction 155

Vestas: class and climate change 155

Trade union responses to the Vestas occupation 164

The Vestas occupation and climate actors 170

Conclusion 176

Notes 177

References 177

7 Climate and class: a missing link

184

Introduction 184

Climate change and workers 184

Trade unions and climate politics 189

Implications 197

Conclusion 203

References 204

Index

206