

Contents

Acknowledgements	ix
List of abbreviations	xi
1 Introduction: security sector reform in transforming societies	1
Approach	2
Conceptualising change	8
The organisation of this book	10
Part I Security sector reform
2 Security sector reform: a framework for analysis	15
The origins of security sector reform	16
Defining security sector reform	22
A framework for analysis	27
Conclusion	44
Part II The political level
3 Security sector reform at the political level: Croatia	53
The legacy of the 1990s	53
First generation security sector reform	58
Second generation security sector reform	67
Conclusion	75

4 Security sector reform at the political level:
Serbia and Montenegro	83
The legacy of the 1990s	84
First generation security sector reform	89
Second generation security sector reform	101
Conclusion	110

Part III The organisational level

5 Security sector reform at the organisational level:
Croatia	121
The legacy of the 1990s	121
Role	127
Expertise	137
Responsibility	141
Conclusion	144
6 Security sector reform at the organisational level:
Serbia and Montenegro	152
The legacy of the 1990s	152
Role	159
Expertise	172
Responsibility	176
Conclusion	180

Part IV The international level

7 Security sector reform at the international level:
Croatia	191
Security assistance	191
Pre-conditionality	198
Direct conditionality	202
Conclusion	207
8 Security sector reform at the international level:
Serbia and Montenegro	213
Security assistance	213
Pre-conditionality	221
Direct conditionality	226
Conclusion	230

Part V Conclusion

9 Conclusion: security sector reform in comparative context	237
The specificities of reform	238
The political level	242
The organisational level	247
The international level	251
Conclusion	256

Index	259
-------	-----

This book would not have been possible without the support and assistance of many different people and organisations. The early stages of the project took place under the auspices of an Associate Research Fellowship with the International Institute for Strategic Studies and the financial support of the Geneva Center for the Democratic Control of Armed Forces. Subsequent research fieldwork was made possible through a British Academy Small Research Grant, while the manuscript was completed with the help of a University of Bristol Research Fellowship. Miroslav Hadžić and the Centre Civil-Military Relations in Belgrade lent me valuable assistance during successive rounds of fieldwork in Serbia, while Ozren Zuncic from the University of Zagreb did likewise in Croatia.

Many of the concepts and ideas which underpin the approach taken in this book were developed during my previous work with Andrew Coffey at University College Cork and Anthony Forster at the University of Bristol, and to them I owe a debt of gratitude. I am also grateful to all the people who took time to read and comment on earlier drafts of the manuscript. Particular thanks must go to Alex Bellamy, Miroslav Hadžić, Włocław Nowosielski and an anonymous reviewer from Manchester University Press, all of whom read and commented on the draft manuscript in its entirety. Thanks also to Malcolm Chalmers, Anthony Brewer, Alice Hills and Elke Krahmann who commented on Chapter 2; to Amadeo Watkins and Ozren Zuncic who commented on Chapters 3, 5 and 7; and to Terrell Carver for his thoughts on titles. All provided critical and insightful comments that were invaluable to the development of the manuscript as a whole.

Finally, many thanks to my parents Peter and Anne for their support over the years, and especially to my wife Kathryn for all her encouragement, enthusiasm and patience. Thanks also to my son Henry for always making me smile. It is to him this book is dedicated.