4	Conclusion	272
	Discussion	277
	Jozef Konings
1	Technological progress and unemployment	278
2	Globalisation and unemployment	279
3	Policy	280
9	Macroeconomic and policy implications of shifts in the relative demand for skills	282
	Olivier J. Blanchard
1	The race between relative demand and relative supply	282
2	Unemployment	283
3	The USA versus Europe	285
4	The shape and size of transfers	286

5	Supply responses	287
6	Technological progress	288
7	Conclusions	289
	Discussion	291
	Gylfi Zoega
10	Would cutting payroll taxes on the unskilled have a significant impact on unemployment?	296
	Stephen J. Nickell and Brian Bell
1	Introduction	296
2	The determinants of unemployment rates by skill	299
3	Unemployment and wages by skill	305
4	Should payroll taxes on the unskilled be cut?	320
	Appendix: notes to table 10.2	323
	Discussion	329

1	Preliminaries	468
2	Unemployment and job reallocation	471

3	Job reallocation and labour market policy	477
4	Conclusions	486
	Appendix: definitions and sources	487
	Discussion	489
	Brian Bell
1	Do cross-country variations in gross job reallocation tell us anything?	490
2	Is the data what we think it is?	491
3	Are the empirical results significant and robust?	492
4	Should we be concentrating separately on job creation and job destruction rates?	493
	Discussion	495
	Ana L. Revenga
1	Comparability of the data	496
2	Confused causality	496
3	Conclusions	498
 PART SIX: COMPARING UNEMPLOYMENT POLICIES
16	Unemployment in the OECD and its remedies	501
	Patrick Minford
1	Trade, development and global competition	502
2	The model	504
