
Contents

Preface	vii
Acknowledgments	xiii
1 Perceptions of Cities and Rail, and a Changing Paradigm	1
The political scenario, current conditions, and ecological priorities	2
American perceptions about cities	12
Mobility issues and solutions for dispersed development	17
A changing paradigm	25
2 The Parking Challenge to Compact and Affordable Transit-Oriented Development	35
Social equity in housing	35
Spatial and cost implications of parking provisions	37
Transit-oriented development—walkability on both ends of transit trips	49
Reducing the parking requirement	62
Other challenges and opportunities in developing TOD	65
3 Transit Options and the Unique Features of Rail	71
A very brief history of passenger rail in the United States	71
Critical attributes of the major urban transit modes	75
Emergence of intermediate-speed transit modes	76
Basic reasons for rail's practicality and popularity	83
Status of urban rail development	90
High-speed rail—existing worldwide and envisioned in the United States	97
Automation in transit of various types	108

4	Easing Access to Rail	117
	Need for alternatives to car-park-and-ride	117
	Potential for safer walking and cycling networks in the United States	120
	Financial viability of transit linked to easier access to it	126
	Achieving change in America	131
	Other mini-modes for access	144
5	Different Speeds for Different Settings	151
	Speeding for a high	151
	Historical perspective on auto speeding	152
	The “traffic world” of the highway, contrasted with the “social world”	153
	20 mph zones and “blanket” zones in England, and similar US and Irish experiments	157
	Designing cities for the most vulnerable among us—the example of Bogotá	160
6	Urban Design for Pedestrian- and Transit-Oriented Cities	163
	Traffic calming	164
	For the downtowns—pedestrian streets	181
	Coordinating pedestrian streets with transit	197
	Turning gray cities to green	218
7	A Market to Match Ecological Truths	221
	Climate goals	221
	Balancing our approach to the use of energy	231
	Reducing the dominance of the automobile—four interrelated steps	237
	Vested interests and politics	243
	Current trends	247
	Abbreviations	253
	Notes	255
	Selected Bibliography	297
	Index	305