

CONTENTS

Preface to the first edition	xiii
Preface to the second edition	xiv
 Introduction	 1
The organisation of the book	2
Selecting material	3
 Part I
Preliminaries and Early History
 1 Criminology, crime and deviance: some preliminaries	 7
Key themes	7
Good old common sense	7
Setting the scene	8
Criminology	11
Crime	13
Deviance	19
Selected further reading	22
 2 Measuring crime and criminality	 25
Key themes	25
Official statistics	25
The 'dark figure' of crime	27
Public reporting	27
Changes in the law	28
The role of the police	29
Ways of seeing	30
The implications for criminal statistics	32
Victim surveys	32

The usefulness of criminal statistics	40
Local crime surveys and left realism	42
Recent crime trends	44
Selected further reading	44
 3 Criminology and criminologists up to World War Two	 47
Key themes	47
Tree of sin, tree of knowledge	47
The criminological tree of knowledge: separating the tree from the wood	49
Classicism and positivism	50
Positivist criminology	52
The turn of the century to the 1930s	55
Eugenics	58
Selected further reading	60
 Part II
World War Two to the Mid-1960s
 4 The discipline of criminology and its context – 1	 63
Key themes	63
The emergence of criminology	64
Sociological criminology	70
Sociological criminology in Britain from the 1950s to the mid-1960s	72
Sociological criminology in the United States	76
Selected further reading	80
 5 Social disorganisation and anomie	 81
Key themes	81
The sociology and criminology of Emile Durkheim (1858–1917)	81
The Chicago School	89
Mertonian strain theory	95
Selected further reading	99
 6 Strain, subcultures and delinquency	 101
Key themes	101
A. K. Cohen: developments in strain theory	101
R. Cloward and L. Ohlin: opportunity knocks	104
Selected further reading	107

7 Criminological theory in Britain	109
Key themes	109
American influences	109
Sociological criminology in Britain	112
Developing a British perspective	115
Cultural diversity theory	115
Schools and the 'problem of adjustment'	119
Subcultural theory: taking stock	121
Selected further reading	123

Part III

The Mid-1960s to the Early 1970s

8 The discipline of criminology and its context – 2	127
Key themes	127
The development of sociological criminology in Britain	127
The break with orthodoxy: the new deviancy	128
The New Left	134
Radicals and the new deviancy: the impact on British criminology	135
Selected further reading	138
9 New deviancy theory: the interactionist approach to deviance	139
Key themes	139
Labelling theory	140
Learning to become 'deviant'	142
Primary and secondary deviation	143
The amplification of deviance	145
Conceptualising deviance	145
Criticisms of the new deviancy	146
Selected further reading	152

Part IV

The 1970s

10 The discipline of criminology and its context – 3	157
Key themes	157
Deviance and politics	157
The sociology of law: making laws, making deviants	160
Criminology in the 1970s: other directions	164
Orthodox criminology	168
Radical critiques and the growth of the New Right	170
Selected further reading	175

11 Post-new deviancy and the new criminology	177
Key themes	177
Deviance and power	178
American conflict theory	179
Politicising deviance	182
Critical criminology	183
Marx and Engels on crime	186
Taylor, Walton and Young and the politicisation of deviance	188
Politicising deviance: nuts, sluts, preverts . . . and revolutionaries?	189
Youth subcultures and politics	190
Critical criminology: deviance, crime and power	195
Phenomenology and criminology	202
Ethnomethodology	203
Control theory	204
Feminist perspectives and criminology	209
Selected further reading	212
 Part V The 1980s to the Mid-1990s
12 The discipline of criminology and its context – 4	217
Key themes	217
The shift to the right in British politics	218
Criminology's external history	220
Social organisation	222
The growth of policy-oriented research	224
The nature and context of research	227
Policy-oriented research and the Left	231
Contemporary British criminology	233
Selected further reading	237
13 Criminological theory	239
Key themes	239
Mainstream criminology	239
Longitudinal research and criminal careers	240
The historical roots	250
Feminism and criminology	252
Gender and crime	265
Administrative criminology	271
Right-wing classicism	274
Neo-positivism	276
Radical criminology	279

Critical criminology and left realism	282
Final remarks on this period	288
Winning the fight against crime?	290
Selected further reading	291
Postscript	292

Part VI

The Mid-1990s into the New Millennium

14 The discipline of criminology and its context – 5	295
Key themes	295
New Labour, old problems	296
Restorative justice	301
Social policy and New Labour	303
Crime prevention, crime reduction and community safety	303
Crime and criminal justice: the wider context	307
Criminology in the new millennium	311
Selected further reading	314
15 Theoretical perspectives: recent developments	317
Key themes	317
Introduction	317
Postmodernist perspectives	319
Feminist perspectives	323
Perspectives on masculinities	329
Control perspectives	331
Cultural perspectives	334
Critical perspectives	337
Final remarks	352
Selected further reading	352
Postscript	354
References	355
Name index	389
Subject index	399