

Contents

Boxes, Tables and Figures	xvii
About the author	xx
Preface to the Fourth Edition	xxi
Acknowledgements	xxv

PART ONE INTRODUCING THE CULTURAL INDUSTRIES 1

1 Change and Continuity, Power and Creativity 3

1.1	An overview of some changes – and the importance of continuity	4
1.2	Why do the cultural industries matter?	7
1.2.1	The cultural industries make and circulate products that shape knowledge and understanding	7
1.2.2	The cultural industries manage cultural production and labour	8
1.2.3	The cultural industries have a key role in economic life	11
1.3	Matters of definition	14
1.3.1	Key neighbouring industries: information technology, consumer electronics and telecommunications	17
1.3.2	Other borderline and problem cases	22
1.4	Alternative terms: media industries, creative industries, etc.	23
1.5	Where I'm coming from	25

2 The Cultural Industries Approach: Distinctive Features of Culture-Producing Businesses 27

2.1	From 'The Culture Industry' to the cultural industries	28
2.2	Industries that make texts: the distinctive features	30
2.2.1	Risky business	31
2.2.2	Creativity versus commerce	33
2.2.3	High production costs and low reproduction costs	34
2.2.4	Semi-public goods	34
2.2.5	Misses are offset against hits by building a repertoire	35

2.2.6	Concentration, integration and co-opting publicity	35
2.2.7	Artificial scarcity	36
2.2.8	Formatting: stars, genres, serials	37
2.2.9	Loose control of symbol creators; tight control of distribution and marketing	37
2.3	Outline of the argument	38

PART TWO ANALYTICAL FRAMEWORKS 45

3 Theories of Culture, Theories of Cultural Production 47

3.1	Industry and production in media, communication and cultural research: a tradition of neglect	48
3.2	Media and cultural economics	49
3.3	Critical political economy approaches to culture	52
3.3.1	Which political economy?	56
3.4	Sociology of culture – and business, management and organisational studies	59
3.5	Critical sociological approaches	61
3.6	The problem of texts, meanings and representation	63
3.7	Cultural studies: some achievements and limitations	64
3.8	Cultural studies approaches to media industries and media production	68
3.8.1	Creative industries analysis	70
3.8.2	The turn to cultural work and creative labour	71
3.8.3	Production studies	71
3.8.4	Critical media industry studies	72
3.9	The approach taken here	73

4 Cultural Industries in the Twentieth Century: The Key Features 81

4.1	The place of cultural production in economies and societies: three eras of cultural production	84
4.2	The cultural industries as commodification and marketisation of culture	86
4.3	Business ownership, structure and control: increasing presence of large corporations	88
4.4	Dominant technologies	92
4.5	Distinctive patterns of organisation, management and labour: (fairly) loose control of production, tight control of circulation	93
4.5.1	Creativity and commerce relations	97

4.6	The quality of cultural work	99
4.7	Internationalisation and domination by the USA	101
4.8	Textual change	103
4.8.1	Choice, diversity, multiplicity	103
4.8.2	Quality	104
4.8.3	Texts, social justice and the serving of interests	104
5	Why the Cultural Industries Began to Change in the Late Twentieth Century	109
5.1	How not to explain change: three forms of reduction	110
5.2	Contexts for change and continuity in the cultural industries, 1945–1990	112
5.3	Political-economic change: the Long Downturn	113
5.4	Political and regulatory change: the rise of neo-liberalism	114
5.5	Changing business strategies	117
5.5.1	Investment shifts towards service industries	118
5.5.2	Internationalisation	120
5.5.3	Organisational innovation and restructuring	123
5.6	Sociocultural and textual changes	124
5.7	Technological change: information technology and consumer electronics	127
PART THREE	POLICY CHANGE	133
6	Policy Change in Media and Telecommunications: Marketisation and Copyright	135
6.1	The importance of policy	136
6.2	Deregulation, re-regulation and cultural marketisation	140
6.3	Telecommunications and broadcasting: Why was the state so involved?	143
6.3.1	Telecommunications as a public utility	143
6.3.2	Broadcasting as a national resource and a limited one	144
6.3.3	The power of broadcasting	145
6.4	The 1980s: the rationales are dismantled and marketisation follows	145
6.4.1	Challenge to the telecoms as utility rationale	145
6.4.2	Challenge to the broadcasting as scarce, national resource rationale	146
6.4.3	Challenge to the power of broadcasting rationale	146
6.5	Five waves of marketisation	147

6.6	The first wave: changes in communications policy in the USA, 1980–1990	149
6.7	The second wave: changes in broadcasting policy in other advanced industrial states, 1985–1995	151
6.7.1	Defining characteristics of public service broadcasting systems	151
6.7.2	Variations in public service systems	152
6.7.3	The social and cultural role of PSB	153
6.7.4	PSB under attack: case studies of change	154
6.8	The third wave: transitional and mixed societies, 1989 onwards	156
6.9	The fourth wave: towards convergence and internationalisation, 1992 onwards	159
6.9.1	Convergence	159
6.9.2	International policy bodies	162
6.10	Copyright	164
6.10.1	Longer, stronger copyrights	166
7	Cultural Policy: Creative Cities, Creative Industries, Creative Economies	175
7.1	Cultural industries and the city	177
7.1.1	The Greater London Council and leftist cultural industries policy	178
7.1.2	Creative cities and creative clusters	179
7.2	Creative industries and creative economy concepts at the national level	187
7.3	Creative industries and creative economy policy goes global	192
PART FOUR	CHANGE AND CONTINUITY IN THE CULTURAL INDUSTRIES, 1990 TO 2017	197
8	Ownership (1): Concentration, Conglomeration and Corporate Power, 1980–2010	201
8.1	Ownership concentration matters – but power is the real issue	203
8.2	Why corporations matter	209
8.3	The emergence of cultural mega-corporations, 1980–2005	211
8.4	2000 onwards: the IT mega-corporations emerge, (some) cultural industry corporations begin to struggle	215
8.5	Conglomeration: from synergy to ‘convergence’	221
8.6	Vertical integration	226

9 Ownership (2): Concentration, Conglomeration and Corporate Power, 2010 onwards	233
9.1 Interacting mega-corporations in four sectors	234
9.1.1 The second tier	239
9.1.2 The continuing presence of small companies	240
9.2 Evolving forms of interdependence, inter-firm networks and alliances	243
9.3 The 2010s: a new wave of communication policy rolls out – telecoms mega-mergers and anti-tech backlash	246
9.4 Are the cultural industries getting bigger?	249
9.4.1 Cultural industries in modern economies	250
9.4.2 Cultural industries in global business	254
9.5 Continuing commodification	255
10 How the Claims of Digital Optimists were Contradicted by the Rise of Digital Culture	261
10.1 The digital optimists/neophiliacs and their key claims	264
10.2 Problems with digital culture as a whole	273
10.2.1 Digital divides: inequalities in access, skills and activity	275
10.2.2 Control of circulation, concentrations of attention, and the myth of the long tail	276
10.2.3 Commercialisation and advertising	280
10.2.4 Surveillance, big data and 'datafication'	281
10.2.5 Free labour, unpaid labour	284
10.2.6 IT giants and their operations: policy and environmental impact	288
11 The Effects of Digital Networks on Individual Industries	293
11.1 The music recording industry: the surprising resilience of the majors and the rise of streaming	296
11.2 Newspapers and news: legacy brands remain powerful, the public interest remains vulnerable	302
11.3 Television and online video: abundance, streaming and the increasing presence of IT companies	306
11.4 Books: print survives, self-publishing thrives	312
11.5 Digital games	314
12 Creativity, Commerce and Organisation	323
12.1 The increasing importance of marketing and market research	326

12.2	Audience research and autonomy in film, advertising and television	330
12.3	Audience research in the digital age: more central than ever, but still contested and fallible	335
12.4	Control of creativity: tighter or looser?	337
12.4.1	Journalistic autonomy	338
12.4.2	Creativity, commerce and control in popular music and theatre	342
13	Working Conditions and Inequalities in the Cultural Industries	349
13.1	Characteristics of cultural labour: insecure, irregular, unequal	350
13.2	Inequalities and segregations: class, gender and ethnicity	355
13.3	Terms and conditions of cultural work in different roles	360
13.3.1	'Unskilled' and semi-skilled workers	360
13.3.2	Technical workers	361
13.3.3	Creative managers	361
13.3.4	Symbol creators	362
13.4	Activism and policy efforts to reform cultural labour conditions and inequalities	367
14	Internationalisation: Neither Globalisation nor Cultural Imperialism	373
14.1	Neither cultural imperialism nor globalisation	376
14.2	Factors behind cultural domination by the USA	380
14.2.1	Size and nature of the domestic market for leisure in the USA	381
14.2.2	Active role of the US state in promoting its cultural industries abroad	381
14.3	Television inequality	382
14.3.1	Reversing cultural flows? The case of Latin American drama	385
14.3.2	Transnational television in the digital era: beyond nations?	388
14.4	The rise of East Asian television	392
14.5	The international film industry: Hollywood power	398
14.6	Other film industries, other texts: Bollywood, Nollywood and China	401
14.6.1	India	401
14.6.2	Nigeria	403
14.6.3	Hong Kong and China	404

14.7	Cultural imperialism and popular music	408
14.7.1	Authenticity versus hybridity	408
14.7.2	Western cultural products can be interpreted in different ways	409
14.7.3	Spread of ownership and success	409
14.8	Internet imperialism, platform imperialism?	413
15	Texts: Diversity, Quality and Social Justice	421
15.1	Choice, diversity and multiplicity	423
15.1.1	How might we measure diversity? The case of popular music	424
15.1.2	It's all the same: assertions of homogeneity	426
15.1.3	Is television offering a greater diversity of experiences and perspectives in the 'post-network' era?	427
15.1.4	Diversity or otherwise in the powerful UK press	428
15.2	Social justice and changes in texts	430
15.2.1	Advertising, promotion, commercialism	430
15.2.2	The politics of entertainment	436
15.2.3	Has news journalism become less questioning of power?	439
15.3	Social fragmentation and market segmentation	444
15.4	Has quality declined?	448
15.4.1	Short attention spans, shock and cultural authority: reality television and celebrity	448
15.4.2	Comparing quality: book publishing	452
15.4.3	Quality, independence and niche markets: indie cinema in the 1990s	452
16	Conclusions: A New Era in Cultural Production?	457
16.1	The extent of change	458
16.2	Evaluating change/continuity	463
16.3	Explaining change/continuity	465
16.4	Implications for future research	466
	Appendix: Some Objections to my Definition of the Cultural Industries and the Assumptions Employed Therein	469
	Glossary	473
	References	483
	Index	525