

CONTENTS

Editorial Foreword
John Foster	ix
Notes on Contributors	xiii
Introduction: Looking for Hope between Disaster and Catastrophe
Brian Heatley, Rupert Read and John Foster	1
Part I: Politics	13
Chapter 1 – Could Capitalism Survive the Transition to a Post-Growth Economy?
Richard McNeill Douglas	15
Chapter 2 – Facing Up to Climate Reality: International Relations as (Un)usual
Peter Newell	35
Chapter 3 – Making the Best of Climate Disasters: On the Need for a Localised and Localising Response
Rupert Read and Kristen Steele	53
Part II: Systems	69
Chapter 4 – Linking Cities and the Climate: Is Urbanisation Inevitable?
Jonathan Essex	71
Chapter 5 – Dealing with Extreme Weather
Anne Chapman	93

CONTENTS

Chapter 6 – Geoengineering as a Response to the Climate Crisis: Right Road or Disastrous Diversion? Helena Paul and Rupert Read	109
Part III: Framings	133
Chapter 7 – What the Crisis of the Late Middle Ages in Europe Can Tell Us about Global Climate Change Brian Heatley	135
Chapter 8 – Facing Up to Ecological Crisis: A Psychosocial Perspective from Climate Psychology Nadine Andrews and Paul Hoggett	157
Chapter 9 – Where Can We Find Hope? John Foster	175
Coda—Where Next? John Foster on behalf of the Green House Collective	193
Bibliography	199
Sponsors	223