

Bridges To Buenos Aires was recorded on April 5th 1998 during the Rolling Stones' five night sell-out residency at the city's Estadio Monumental Antonio Vespucio Liberti (commonly known as River Plate Stadium). By this point, the band had played to over two million people on the first two legs of the tour in North America and Japan.

Amongst many highlights in this concert, special guest Bob Dylan joins the band onstage at River Plate for a unique performance of his classic 'Like A Rolling Stone'.

The band only played a further two dates in South America on their triumphant, year long Bridges To Babylon tour, before they headed back to North America, and Europe.
