INTRODUCTION	11
PART I. THE PHYSIOLOGICAL BASIS OF THE BODY-IMAGE
1. Postural and tactile impressions in relation to the body-image	17
2. Localization on the skin and the optic part of the body-image	21
3. Further remarks on the apparatus which serves localization	24
4. Imperception of parts of the body-image and of impairment of somatic function (anosognosia)	29
5. Alloaesthesia, imperception, right and left; Synaesthesia in the body-image	36
6. Some remarks about the relation of the body-image to the tactile-kinaesthetic perception of movement	39
7. Agnosia concerning the body-image (autotopognosia); finger agnosia	40
8. Interrelation of body-images	43
9. Apraxia and agnosia in their relation to the schema of the body	45
10. Remarks on human action	50
11. The relation of apraxia to agnosia and the representations of movement	58
12. Expressive and reflectory movements	62
13. The phantom	63
14. Psychogenic body-image imperception and allochiria. Their relation to organic changes	70
15. Muscle-tone and body-image. The persistence of tone	75
16. The influence of habitual posture on the postural model	81
17. The image of the face. Autoscopic experiments	83
18. How we perceive the outer surface of our body	85
19. The openings of the body	88
20. The heavy mass of the body	91
21. The vestibular influence on the perception of the weight of the body	94
22. Pain	98
23. Development of the body-image	104

24.	Two deceptions. The influence of the optic sphere on the body-image	106
25.	The body-image in clouded consciousness and the vestibular influence on the postural model of the body	114
PART II. THE LIBIDINOUS STRUCTURE OF THE BODY-IMAGE
1.	Narcissism and the love of one's own body	119
2.	Erogenic zones and body-image	124
3.	Neurasthenia	127
4.	Depersonalization	138
5.	Hypochondria	141
6.	Pain and Libido	145
7.	A case of loss of unity in the body-image	158
8.	Hysteria	168
9.	Some principles concerning the libidinous structure of the body-image	170
10.	Conversion	174
11.	Organic disease	181
12.	Further remarks on expansion and destruction of the body-image	188
13.	Libidinous development of the body-image	194
14.	Changing the body-image by clothing, and the psychology of clothes	201
15.	Gymnastics, dance and expressive movements	206
PART III. THE SOCIOLOGY OF THE BODY-IMAGE
1.	Space and the body-image	213
2.	On curiosity and on the expression of emotions	216
3.	Preliminary remarks on the relation between body-images	223
4.	Erythrophobia (Fear of blushing) as an instance of social neurosis	227
5.	Social relations of body-images	234
6.	Imitation and the body-image	243
7.	On identification	249
8.	Beauty and body-image	257
9.	Variability of the body-image	273
