

Contents

List of Tables and Maps

ix

List of Abbreviations

xi

1	Introduction: Britain's Place in a Changing World	1
	From 'superpower' to 'global hub'	1
	Trying (and failing) to adjust to harsh realities?	5
	'Traditionalist' versus 'transformationalist' perspectives	7
2	British Power and the Burden of History	13
	The rise of British imperial power	13
	New threats and challenges: the British Empire and the 'resource gap' before 1914	16
	The First World War and its legacy	20
	Foreign and defence policy challenges of the 1930s	22
	The Second World War and the consequences of relative economic decline	27
	Continuity and consensus in post-war foreign and defence policy	31
	Ernest Bevin and the foundations of the post-war foreign policy consensus	34
3	From Empire to Commonwealth	40
	The imperial legacy and the test of war	40
	The withdrawal from Empire, phase 1: India and Palestine	42
	Retrenchment and resistance, 1945–57	47
	The Suez crisis, 1956: the last blast of imperialism?	50
	Withdrawal from Empire, phase 2: Harold Macmillan and the 'Wind of Change'	55
	Forces driving the process of decolonisation	59
	Constraints upon Britain's imperial retreat	60
	Britain and the transition to black majority rule in southern Africa	62
	Fighting for the Falklands	64
	Britain and the Commonwealth of Nations	68
	Britain and European decolonisation: a comparative perspective	70

4	Britain, the Atlantic Alliance and the 'Special Relationship'	74
	Wartime cooperation and conflict	74
	Ernest Bevin and the policy of containment	77
	Fluctuating fortunes: Churchill, Eden and Macmillan, 1951–63	83
	The Atlantic alliance in decline, 1964–79	86
	'Special' once more? Thatcher, Major, Reagan and Bush, 1979–97	87
	New Labour, Clinton and George W. Bush	94
	Gordon Brown and 'our most important bilateral relationship'	101
	The nature of the 'Special Relationship'	103
	'Special Relationships': a sectoral perspective	105
	Anglo-American relations since 1945: a cost–benefit analysis	107
5	Britain and Europe	111
	Paying the 'Price of Victory'	111
	Britain and the limits of cooperation, 1945–55	117
	'Missing the boat': Britain's first two applications, 1955–69	120
	Edward Heath's European crusade and Labour's referendum, 1970–79	126
	Margaret Thatcher and the EU budget, 1979–84	129
	The Single European Act (SEA), the Delors Report and monetary union, 1984–90	132
	John Major: a change of tone but not substance	134
	Tony Blair and the 'Europeanisation' of New Labour	136
	New Labour, the euro, the Constitutional Treaty and other problems	142
	Gordon Brown and selective Europeanism since 2007	146
	New Labour and the EU: continuity and change	150
6	The Problems of Conventional Defence	152
	British military power: reacting to economic decline or adjusting to change?	152
	Disillusioned hopes of military power with reduced expenditure, 1945–57	159
	Duncan Sandys and the defence White Paper of 1957	162
	The Wilson governments and the retreat from 'East of Suez'	165
	The Thatcher governments and 'the Way Forward'	168
	'Options for Change' in a world turned upside down, 1989–97	171

New Labour and hopes of delivering security in a changing world	173
Too many commitments, too little money? Defence funding since 1997	176
Blair, Brown and the crisis of military overstretch	180
Expenditure priorities and the failures of defence procurement	186
Conventional defence forces since 1945: Plus ça change . . .	188
7 Britain and the Bomb: The Quest for a Nuclear Deterrent	192
Wartime collaboration and US betrayal	194
The Attlee government and the independent nuclear deterrent	197
Churchill and the hydrogen bomb	200
Great power status – but at a price	202
Trying (and failing) to keep up with the superpowers	205
The Thatcher government and the purchase of Trident	207
New Labour and the upgrading of Trident	209
The US connection and the ‘son of Star Wars’	214
8 New Labour, the ‘Ethical Dimension’ and ‘Liberal Intervention’	216
Labour’s commitment to an ‘ethical dimension’ in British foreign policy	216
New Labour and human rights abroad	220
New Labour, ethics and arms exports	225
The arms trade, bribery and the control of international corruption	231
International development and developing world debt relief	234
Climate change and the environmental agenda	241
The ‘Blair doctrine’, liberal intervention and the Kosovo campaign	242
Afghanistan, the Taliban and the ‘war on terror’	245
Saddam Hussein, Operation Desert Fox and the Iraq War	248
Gordon Brown and the ‘Responsibility to Protect’	250
The ‘ethical dimension’ in retrospect	252
9 Making Foreign and Defence Policy in a Changing World	255
The complexity of the foreign policy process in Britain	255
Executive dominance in the formulation of foreign policy	259
Who makes British defence policy?	264

Outside the magic circle: who is excluded from the policy process?	268
Executive 'overload' and the problem of priorities	270
The problems of long-term planning and 'horizon-scanning'	272
Redefining the role of the FCO within a challenging Whitehall environment	274
Reviewing Britain's overseas representation	279
A much too Diplomatic Service? Defending the national interest	282
Reforming the composition and career structure: the Foresight initiative	283
The role of the intelligence services	284
10 Conclusion: the Challenge of an Uncertain Future	288
The changing international environment after 1945	288
Continuity and change in British policy	289
The challenge of the unknown: redefining the threat	291
Devising a strategy for an uncertain world	295
Britain's position in the world – the more that changes the more that stays the same	299
Useful Websites for Foreign and Defence Sources	302
Bibliography	303
Index	327