

Contents

	Notes on contributors	x
	List of boxes	xii
	Preface and Acknowledgements	xv
1	Introduction	1
	Regina Scheyvens and Donovan Storey
	Purpose 1
	Concerns over appropriateness of doing fieldwork in the Third World 2
	Responses to the crisis of legitimacy facing Western researchers 4
	The potential value of research with 'others' 5
	'The field' 8
	Scope and limitations 10
	Format 11
	Overview 12
	PART I METHODOLOGY 15
2	Designing Development Research	17
	Warwick E. Murray and John Overton
	Introduction 17
	Design – the ideal field research project 19
	Logistics – proposing and planning 29
	Research practice – between rigidity and flexibility 32
	Conclusion 32

3	Using Quantitative Techniques	37
	John Overton and Peter van Diermen
	Introduction	37
	What is quantitative data?	38
	What techniques should be used?	39
	Sampling	42
	How can data be analysed?	44
	Limitations and pitfalls	50
	Conclusion	54
4	Qualitative Research	57
	Dan Brockington and Sian Sullivan
	Introduction	57
	The popularity and perils of PRA	60
	Ethnography: participant observation, oral testimony and the production of texts	65
	On subjectivity and experience: phenomenological and embodiment approaches	68
	Qualitative not quantitative?	70
	Conclusion	72
	PART II PREPARATION FOR THE FIELD	75
5	Practical Issues	77
	Helen Leslie and Donovan Storey
	Introduction	77
	Funding	77
	Establishing contacts	79
	Research 'permission': documentation and gatekeepers	81
	Health and safety	83
	Places to stay, or not to stay	87
	Where to go and when to go	89
	Packing	91
	Conclusion	93

6	Personal Issues Henry Scheyvens and Barbara Nowak	97
	Introduction 97
	Motivation and selection of research topic 99
	Creating a good impression 100
	Desirable personal traits 102
	The 'human element' in making judgements 106
	Preparing for discomfort and depression 107
	Families and partners in the field 109
	Conclusion 114
PART III IN THE FIELD 117
7	Entering the Field Helen Leslie and Donovan Storey	119
	The first day 120
	The morning after 122
	Culture shock 122
	Behaviour during fieldwork 128
	Working with others: research assistants 131
	Language issues 135
	Conclusion 137
8	Ethical Issues Regina Scheyvens, Barbara Nowak and Henry Scheyvens	139
	Introduction 139
	Ethics in research 140
	Official ethics procedures 141
	Power relations between researchers and their informants 149
	Gatekeepers 153
	Reciprocity 155
	Truth and deception 158
	Sex and sexuality 161
	Safety of the researcher and responsibilities to self 163
	Conclusion 165

9	Working with Marginalised, Vulnerable or Privileged Groups	167
	Regina Scheyvens, Henry Scheyvens and Warwick E. Murray
	Introduction	167
	Researching women	169
	Researching children and youths	173
	Researching minority ethnic groups	176
	Researching the very poor	179
	Researching the elite and powerful	182
	Advocacy and activism	187
	Conclusion	191

PART IV LEAVING THE FIELD 195

10	Anything to Declare?
	The Politics and Practicalities of Leaving the Field	197
	Sara Kindon and Julie Cupples
	Introduction	197
	Reasons for leaving	199
	Factors influencing experiences of leaving	201
	Feelings/emotions associated with leaving	202
	Leaving strategies and ethical responsibilities	206
	Practical concerns	211
	Conclusion	213
11	Returning to University and Writing the Field	217
	Julie Cupples and Sara Kindon
	Introduction	217
	Managing shifting feelings and identities about returning to university	219
	Writing and representing	222
	Negotiating competing responsibilities: participants, audiences and careers	227
	Returning to the field	229
	Conclusion	230

12	Afterword	233
	Donovan Storey and Regina Scheyvens
	Reflections on the value of fieldwork	233
	Key themes	234
	The future of development research	235
	Bibliography	239
	Index	257