

Detailed Table of Contents

- 1 Introduction—1
- 2 Plain English—2
 - Learning legal writing isn't like learning a foreign language—2
 - Avoid legalese—2
 - Use familiar, plain words—3
 - Omit needless words—3
 - Prefer short sentences and paragraphs—6
 - Build your sentences around active verbs—7
 - Sometimes you can't use plain English—8
- 3 Style—10
 - Do not use contractions—10
 - Don't write in the first person—10
 - Avoid rhetorical questions—11
 - Don't use slang unless you're quoting—11
 - Get serious—12
 - Avoid footnotes—12
 - Underline for emphasis sparingly—12
 - Use conventional typeface—13
 - Use right justification only if your printer spaces evenly—13
 - Don't cheat on type size, line spacing, or margins—14
 - Avoid putting a heading at the bottom of a page—14
 - Indent your paragraphs—15

Master the apostrophe—15
Don't be a slasher—16
Avoid "not un" combinations—16
Don't write in headnote style—16
Don't call someone a liar in a civil case—17
Talk about death without euphemisms—17
Talk about contracts correctly—17
Don't change what you call something—17
Maintain parallelism—18
Capitalize correctly—20
Don't abbreviate the names of places—21
Use proper style for numbers—22
Learn to tell time—23
Gracefully avoid sexist language—25

- 4 Usage—28
accrue, incur—28
admission, admittance—28 affect, effect—28
allude, refer—28
and, &—29
and/or—29
apply—29
arguable, arguably—29
assure, ensure, insure—29
because—30
car—31
clearly—31
communication—31
contact—31
criteria, criterion—32
desires, wants—32
dicta, dictum—32
disinterested—32 facility—32
fired—32

first, firstly—33
 former, latter—33
 ground, grounds—33
 guilty, innocent, liable—33
 imply, infer—34
 in question—34
 in terms of—34
 may, might—35
 monies—35
 moot—35
 motion, move—36
 of course—36
 prove, show—36
 purchase, sale—36
 represents—36
 respective, respectively—37 said—37
 that—39
 the fact that—39
 timely—40
 true facts—40
 whether—41
 widget—41
 with respect to—41

- 5 Spelling—43
 admissible, permissible, reversible—43 advice, advise—43
 alleged—43
 appealed—43
 argument—44
 capital, capitol—44
 causal, casual—44
 comparative—44
 council, counsel—44
 complement, compliment—44

defendant, respondent—44 exercise—45
forbear, forebear—45
foreseeability—45 indictment—45
its, it's—45
judgment—45
lead, led—45
liable, libel—45
loose, lose—46
merchantability—46
occasion, occurrence, omission—46 paid—46
parol, parole—46
personal, personnel—46
plead, pleaded—46
principal, principle—46 privilege—47
rational, rationale—47
receive—47
rescission—47
subpoena—47
supersede—47
tenant, tenet—47
therefor, therefore—47 threshold—48
trespass—48
v., vs.—48
who's, whose—48

6 Case Briefs—49

There are four basic sections in a case brief—49
Case briefs are for your eyes only—50
Your case briefs will get briefer as you gain experience—50
Diagram or illustrate complex cases—51

Courts rarely follow case brief format in their opinions—51

Simplify your case briefs by omitting the issue and implying it in the holding—52

Courts and lawyers often blur the distinction between holdings and rules—53

7 Cases and Courts—55

Refer to your case unambiguously—55

Refer to decided cases efficiently—56

The court is “it”—57

Make it clear which court you’re talking about—57

Remember which court you’re talking to—59

Be precise in describing what a court did—59

Courts don’t have feelings—60

You rarely need to give the name of the judge who wrote an opinion—60

Use the past tense to describe everything about a case except the rule—61

Compare apples with apples when comparing cases—62

Cases aren’t distinguished until you distinguish them—62

8 Names—64

Refer to the parties in your case by their names unless their litigation roles are more persuasive—64

Pick a clear and persuasive name for a business or the government—65

Pick a clear and persuasive name for a group of litigants—66

Introduce short-form names efficiently—66

Don’t use artificial titles for people—68

Be careful using first names alone—69

Avoid initialese—69

“The” is optional before litigation roles—70

Refer to the parties in a cited case by their real-life roles
if possible—70

Refer to the parties in a cited case by their names if you're going to use more than one quotation containing their names—71

A business or institution is "it"—73

Put legal arguments into the mouths of the parties, not their lawyers—74

9 Citations—75

Citation form is a litmus test of your credibility—75

Use underlining instead of italics in citations—75

Use "sec." in citation sentences if you can't make the section symbol (§)—75

Put citations at the end of or out of your sentences—76

Think of citations sentences as footnotes—76

Cite a specific page when you quote or refer to something specific in a case—77

Once you've given a citation for something specific, you don't have to give the citation again—78

Position citations so you don't have to put one after every sentence—78

Use proper short form for case citations—80

Don't give a short form of a case name until after you've given the full citation—81

Avoid introductory signals—82

Don't put a citation after a sentence containing one of your conclusions—82

10 Quotations—84

Use as few quotations as possible—84

Keep quotations as short as possible—84

Summarize the substance of long or difficult quotations—84

Integrate quotations into your text—85

Indent and single-space long or important quotations—86

Punctuate quotations correctly—87

Correctly show changes in quotations—88

Avoid putting legal terms in quotation marks—90

11 Authority—91

Always cite authority for your legal arguments—91

Use mandatory authority as your foundation and other authority to fill in gaps—91

Don't cite a case for a rule that comes directly out of a statute—93

If a federal case applied state law, tell which state's law—93

Cases—unlike fine wines—don't necessarily improve with age—94

A case may be helpful even though the result goes against you—95

Parenthetical phrases are for the facts of unimportant cases—96

Don't cite or quote headnotes—96

Cite as many cases as you need and no more—97

It's hard to tell whether you've found all the relevant
authority—97

Treat "factors" and "requirements" differently—98

12 Office Memoranda—100

Do a first draft early—100

Be objective in an office memo—101

The format of an office memo varies—102

Include a thesis paragraph unless it would be redundant or clumsy—103

Discuss issues one at a time in logical order—104

Organize the discussion of each issue with CRAC—105

Explain the rule of law before applying it to your facts—108

Give enough facts about each case you cite to make it meaningful and useful—109

First give the analysis supporting your conclusion on an issue—even if it's against your client—then discuss counterarguments—111

Tell whether your issue will be decided by a judge or a jury—113

Track the language of cases and statutes when you apply them to your facts—114

Use transitions that point both ways—114

Use subheadings generously even though they aren't required—116

Don't put new material in your Conclusion—116

Express your conclusions as precisely as possible—117

13 Questions Presented—118

Choose clarity over completeness—118

Avoid starting Questions with "Whether"—118

Start with the law and end with the facts—118

Decide whether to use roles or names to refer to the parties—120

Don't include legal conclusions in Questions—121

State only main issues in Questions—122

Carefully select and emphasize undisputed facts to make a Question persuasive—122

Emphasize your trial court victory in persuasive Questions—123

Turn Questions into main point headings in a brief—124

14 Argument—126

Borrow from the format of a brief to make a memorandum of law more effective—126

Tell a compelling story in your Facts—127

Start with your strongest argument whenever possible—130

Argue issues one at a time using CRAC—131

Refute opposing arguments within the framework of your arguments—132

- Choose a few good arguments—134
- Prefer a simple argument to a complicated one—134
- Offer the court an easy way to rule in your favor—134
- Add a policy argument if you've got a good one—135
- Gear your arguments to the standard of review—136
- Rely on a lower court's opinion in your case if it's well-reasoned or well-written—136
- Write in a forceful but reasonable tone—137
- Omit needless introductory words at the start of arguments—137
- Attack opposing arguments, not opposing lawyers—138
- Never risk your credibility—139

15 Conclusion—140

16 Selected Readings—141