

Contents

Acknowledgements	vii
Preface	ix
Introduction: What is Political Theory?	1
1. Two Centuries of Revolution	5
The Centralization and Unification of Government	6
Social Structure	10
The Changing Economy	13
A Century of Political Experimentation	19
2. 'Sheep Devouring Men': Thomas More, the Commonwealthmen and A New Social Criticism	27
An Overview of Tudor Political Theory	28
Sir Thomas More (1478–1535)	33
The Commonwealthmen	39
3. 'A Multitude of Free Men Collected Together': Thomas Smith, John Ponet and Richard Hooker	42
Thomas Smith (1513–1577)	43
John Ponet (1516?–1556)	50
Richard Hooker (1554?–1600)	53
From Corporate Privileges to Individual Rights	61
4. 'The Poorest He That Is in England': Political Ideas in the English Revolution	65
The Road to Putney	66
Political Ideas in the English Civil War	72
The Levellers and the Putney Debates	80
Gerrard Winstanley (1609?–1676?)	87
The Radical Legacy	91
5. 'A Multitude of Men is Made One Person': The Political Thought of Thomas Hobbes	94
Thomas Hobbes (1588–1679)	94
The Elements of Law and De Cive	98
Leviathan	104

6. 'Life, Liberty and Estate': The Political Thought of John Locke	112
John Locke (1632–1704)	112
The Two Treatises of Government	116
Locke's Theory of Property	123
Improvement	131
Conclusion	135
Notes	138
Some Additional Reading	139
Index	144