

Contents

Figure	ix
Acknowledgments	x
Introduction: thinking differently about the future	1
Tracing the origins of the Anthropocene and the fossil fuel economy	1
A sociological approach to intergenerational justice	6
Ecological crisis and societal learning	9
Insights on the nature of social and geological worlds: the emancipatory potentials of the Anthropocene	13
1 Relations between generations as relations of domination	23
Introduction	23
Accounting for relations of inequality that reach beyond the present	27
Language, power and denial	29
Youth as climate burden bearers	33
Between justice ideals and lived realities: climate harms as violations of constitutional rights	35
2 Changing the evaluative discourse on climate change: the campaign for future justice	45
Introduction	45
Framing climate change at close range	46
Social representations of intergenerational wrongdoing	51
Asserting rights to democratic participation	54
Transforming the future through the present	56

3	Are future peoples the bearers of present rights?	64
	Introduction	64
	The case against ascribing present rights to future generations	65
	The case in favor of ascribing present rights to future generations	68
	The contribution of science to the debate on intergenerational justice	72
4	Balancing generational sovereignty with a future ethics	81
	Introduction	81
	'The Earth belongs always to living generations': how Jefferson got it wrong	83
	Pursuing climate justice through the courts: the people v. the state	87
	Advancing an anticipatory approach to climate justice	96
5	Publicly embedded constitutions: legislating for present and future generations	104
	Introduction	104
	Existing state constitutional references to future generations	108
	Protecting future generations' future rights to self-determination	113
6	A deeper framework of intergenerational justice	123
	Introduction	123
	The absence of a macro perspective on relations of justice across generations	124
	Barriers in the way of a social connection approach to justice	124
	Addressing regulatory dysfunctionality	129
	Representing the interests of youth and citizens-to-be	130
	Index	138