

Contents

Foreword: Why Is Kant Worth Fighting For?	vii
Slavoj Žižek

Introduction	1
---------------------	---

1 The (Moral-)Pathology of Everyday Life	7
---	---

2 The Subject of Freedom	21
---------------------------------	----

What freedom?	22
---------------	----

What subject?	25
---------------	----

3 The Lie	43
------------------	----

Kant and 'the right to lie'	43
-----------------------------	----

The Unconditional	53
-------------------	----

The Sadeian trap	58
------------------	----

4 From the Logic of Illusion to the Postulates	64
---	----

The 'stormy ocean' of illusion	64
--------------------------------	----

'Person also means mask'	68
--------------------------	----

The passage to the postulates	75
-------------------------------	----

5 Good and Evil	79
------------------------	----

Fantasy within the limits of reason alone	79
---	----

The logic of suicide	82
----------------------	----

Degrees of evil	86
Like angels, like devils	90
The act as 'subjectivation without subject'	96
6 The Act and Evil in Literature	106
The case of Valmont	107
The case of Don Juan	121
7 Between the Moral Law and the Superego	140
The quantum of affect	140
The sublime and the logic of the superego	149
The status of the law	160
8 Ethics and Tragedy in Psychoanalysis	170
Some preliminary remarks	170
Oedipus, or the Outcast of the Signifier	175
The theft of desire – and the mother in exchange	175
The death of the Thing	187
What is a father?	192
What shall we do with Oedipus?	197
The hostage of the word	200
Sygne, or the Enjoyment of the Remainder	211
Ethics and terror	213
Enjoyment – my neighbour	221
The Real in ethics	234
From pure desire to the drive	238
9 Thus . . .	249
Index	261