Preface	page xi
1 An Introduction and a Point of View	1
1.1 Earlier Theories of the Response Process	3
1.2 A Proposed Model of the Response Process	7
1.3 Other Recent Proposals: High Road/Low Road Theories	16
1.4 Applications of the Model	19
1.5 Implications of the Model	20
2 Respondents' Understanding of Survey Questions	23
2.1 What Is a Question?	26
2.2 Two Views of Comprehension: Immediate Understanding versus Interpretation	30
2.3 Syntactic Difficulties in Question Wording	34
2.4 Semantic Effects: Presupposition, Unfamiliarity, and Vagueness	40
2.5 Survey Pragmatics and Its Effects on Comprehension	50
2.6 Summary	59
3 The Role of Memory in Survey Responding	62
3.1 Survey Questions and Memory for Events	63
3.2 Organization of Autobiographical Memory	67
3.3 Factors Affecting Recall of Autobiographical Events	81
3.4 Summary	97

4	Answering Questions about Dates and Durations	100
4.1	A Typology of Temporal Questions	101
4.2	Cognitive Processing of Temporal Questions	108
4.3	Indirect Effects of Time on Survey Responses	121
4.4	Summary	133
5	Factual Judgments and Numerical Estimates	136
5.1	Cognitive Studies of Frequency	138
5.2	Studies of Frequency Estimation in Surveys	145
5.3	Probability Judgments	160
5.4	Conclusions	163
6	Attitude Questions	165
6.1	The Traditional View	166
6.2	Alternative Paths to an Answer	172
6.3	The Belief-Sampling Model	178
6.4	Tests of the Belief-Sampling Model	185
6.5	Conclusions	194
7	Attitude Judgments and Context Effects	197
7.1	Forms of Context Effects	198
7.2	Mechanisms Producing Context Effects	200
7.3	Variables Affecting the Size and Direction of Context Effects	214
7.4	Serial Position Effects	228
7.5	Conclusions	229
8	Selecting a Response: Mapping Judgments to Survey Answers	230
8.1	Open Items and Rounding	232
8.2	Rating Scales and Scale Anchors	239
8.3	Unordered Categories and Satisficing	250
8.4	Summary	254
9	Editing of Responses: Reporting about Sensitive Topics	255
9.1	What Is a Sensitive Question?	257
9.2	Sensitivity and Nonresponse	261
9.3	Measuring Misreporting	264

9.4	Misreporting in Surveys	269
9.5	Processes Responsible for Misreporting	279
9.6	Editing for Other Purposes	286
9.7	Conclusions	287
10	Mode of Data Collection	289
10.1	The Range of Methods for Survey Data Collection	290
10.2	The Method of Contact and Administration	293
10.3	Other Characteristics of the Data Collection Method	298
10.4	Psychological Effects of the Differences among Data Collection Methods	305
10.5	Conclusions	312
11	Impact of Cognitive Models on Survey Measurement	313
11.1	The Anatomy of a Survey Response	315
11.2	Impact on Conceptions of Survey Measurement Error	318
11.3	Impact on Survey Practice	323
11.4	Impact on Psychology	335
11.5	Barriers to Further Accomplishments	337
